

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

SATIRAE XVI.

WITH ENGLISH NOTES

BY

HERMAN PRIOR, M.A.

LATE SCHOLAR OF TRINITY COLLEGE, OXFORD.

(EXPURGATED EDITION.)

LONDON:

WHITTAKER AND CO. AVE MARIA LANE;

GEORGE BELL, FLEET STREET.

LONDON :
GILBERT AND RIVINGTON, PRINTERS, ST. JOHN'S SQUARE.

P R E F A C E.

THE present notes were completed without reference to any other English edition, but the compiler has since referred to Mr. Macleane's larger work (in the Bibliotheca Classica), and made some useful additions from it. In some instances he has been unable to adopt Mr. Macleane's view; and the latter has hardly done justice to the French commentator (Achaintre).

The size of the present work obviously excludes notes of criticism or illustration, merely as such; neither has it allowed much discussion of conflicting renderings. For the purposes of explanation it is hoped that it will be found reasonably exhaustive; and that the student will be able to feel that he has mastered the author's text and train of thought, as well as the collateral matters arising in his perusal. It should be observed, that no verbal explanation is given which may be obtained directly from the dictionary.

D. JUNII JUVENALIS

AQUINATIS

INTRODUCTORY.

No apology required for writing poetry when it is the universal practice.

Semper ego auditor tantum? nunquamne reponebam,

Vexatus toties rauci Theseide Codri?

Impune ergo mihi recitaverit ille togatas,

Hic elegos? impune diem consumserit ingens

Telephus, aut summi plena jam margine libri 5

Scriptus et in tergo necdum finitus Orestes?

1—18.] The recitation of original poetry was much in fashion at Rome (see Sat. vii. 39—47; 82—87); the subjects being commonly mythological or heroic. Nothing is known of the pieces or poets referred to in these lines.

2. Theseide] like "Aeneis." Musa is said to be the substantive understood.

ib. toties] It was so long, that it took several days reciting.

3. togatas] sub. "fabulae." "Domestic comedies." The Roman stage, like our own, had the broad distinction of 'regular' comedy, and farce. The latter was of home growth, and comprised two kinds; the "mimus,"—pantomime, or low farce, which was mere gesticulation; and the "Atellanae fabulae" (introduced from Campania), which were more refined in character, and included a good deal of dialogue. The regular comedy, on the other hand, was essentially Greek. At first, indeed, it was a mere transcript, preserving the Greek names, dress, and scenes, as well as the plot and dialogue; but latterly only the two latter were retained, and the piece in other respects was brought out with a Roman cast. Greek comedies thus adapted were called 'togatae,' from the Roman costume used; the former class, or mere transcripts, being now termed 'palliatae,' from their Greek dress. See Hor. A. P. 286—288:

"—— vestigia Graeca
Ausl deserere, et celebrare domestica facta, Vel qui praetextas, vel qui docuere togatas."

The 'praetextas' (i. e. praetextatas fabulas) in this passage of Horace, were comedies in which official or distinguished personages were represented; thus resembling the English 'genteel' comedy of the last century.

4. ingens] This is clearly an epithet of the poem, not of the man.

5, 6. summi libri—margine—tergo] Books, i. e. published compositions, were written either on parchment ('membrana'), or on a material obtained from the fine pellicle which surrounds the papyrus, and from which the term 'liber' is derived.

Nota magis nulli domus est sua, quam mihi lucus
 Martis et Aeoliis vicinum rupibus antrum
 Vulcani. Quid agant venti, quas torqueat umbras Aeacus, unde alius furtivae devehat aurum 10
 Pelliculae, quantas jaculetur Monychus ornos, Frontonis platani convulsaque marmora clamant
 Semper, et assiduo ruptae lectore columnae.
 Expectes eadem a summo minimoque poeta!

The writing was usually confined to one side of the parchment or papyrus, which was then rolled up, and put away in a case; hence 'evolvere librum' is to read it. In the present case the poem, after filling up the proper margin, had then done the same with the blank space on top of the roll, and its margin, and finally overflowed on to the back.

7. lucus Martis] Perhaps that of Alba, where Romulus and Remus were born. But it is of course uncertain.

8, 9. antrum Vulcani] i. e. Hiera; one of the "Aeolian isles," N.E. of Sicily. "Aeoliis vicinum rupibus;" i. e. adjacent to Lipara, the abode of Aeolus, which thus gave name to the whole group. So in Virgil, Aen. viii. 416, 417, Vulcan's workshop is described by reference to Lipara; "Insula Sicaniū juxta latus Aeoliamque Erigitur Liparen, fumantibus ardua saxa." In Homer, the workshop is in Olympus, and the position of the isle of Aeolus undetermined.

9. Quid agant venti] Perhaps suggested by the "Aeoliis rupibus" above.

ib. torqueat] "torturea."

10, 11. furtivae — pelliculae] "Bears away the gold of the stolen fleece;" i. e. steals and bears away. In Pindar, Pyth. iv. 430, the fleece is taken with the knowledge of Aetes;—ἰσμεν, ἴδμεν ἐν ἱερῶν Φοῖβου μάχαιραι. It was guarded by a dragon. See note on Sat. xiv. 112—114.

11. quantas—ornos] i. e. the battle of the Centaurs and Lapiths.

Monychus was a Centaur leader.

12, 13. Frontonis—columnae] The owners of large houses lent them for recitations (see Sat. vii. 40), which would usually, for coolness, take place in the garden of the house. Hence 'platani,' l. 12, the plane being the favourite ornamental tree of the Romans. See Hor. Od. ii. 15. 4, 5, "platanusque coelebs Evinctet ulmos." "Marmora" and "columnae" are the marble panelling and pillars of the saloon ('oecus'), which opened by folding doors into the garden. These 'oeci' were one of the refinements of later times. In the earlier Roman houses the only sitting-room was the 'atrium';—an apartment in the centre of the house, communicating with the garden by a passage. Fronto is probably M. Cornelius Fronto; a successful advocate and teacher of rhetoric in the reign of Hadrian. He purchased the garden laid out by Maecenas on the Esquiline hill. See Hor. Sat. i. 8. 7, "vetatque novis considerare in hortis;" cf. l. 14, 15.

ib. convulsa — ruptae] i. e. by the recitation ("lectore," for "lectione") itself:—of course by a strong hyperbole. The applause of the auditory, which is the explanation sometimes given, (cf. Sat. vii. 86.) can hardly be meant here, as it would involve a strained construction of the "assiduo lectore," and still more of the "clamant" in l. 12. For 'ruptae' cf. Virg. Georg. iii. 328, "cantu querulae rumpent arbusta cicadae;" and see Maclean's ad loc.

Et nos ergo manum ferulae subduximus, et nos
 Consilium dedimus Sullae, privatus ut altum 16

 Vatribus occurras, periturae parcere chartae.

15—17.] "We too have declaimed at the rhetoric school;"— and are therefore qualified to write poetry. This was true of the de-clamatory poetry of the day.

16, 17. consilium—dormiret] A frequent "thesis" in the schools of rhetoric.

18. periturae] i. e. which some one else will spoil, if you do not.

20. Aur. alumnus] Lucilius; born at Suessa Aurunca: so called to distinguish it from the Latian Suessa Pometia, which gave name to the Pomptine marshes.

22, 23. Tuscum figat &c.; teneat venabula] Probably, enters the lists in a "venatio," or fight with wild beasts in the amphitheatre. See Macleane ad loc. Sat. vi. 246—267, describes the female gladiator of the day; and from a passage of Suetonius, Domit. 4 ("venationes gla-diatoresque—nec virorum modo pug-nas sed et feminarum"), it may be inferred that women engaged in the "venatio," or fight with beasts, as well. The men who did this were called 'bestiarii.'

23. nuda] transl. "exposed."

24. unus] Probably Licinus, the freedman and barber of Augustus.
 See l. 109 and note.

25.] Parody on Virg. Ecl. i. 29:
 "Candidior postquam tondenti barba cadebat."

26, 27.] "When one of the Nile birth of Canopus," &c. He was Domitian's favourite; Sat. iv. l—33. For the character of Canopus, see Sat. xv. 45, 46.

27. humero—lacernas] "With the mantle thrown back on his shoulder;" lit. "his shoulder summoning back the mantle." This was to show his rings.

29. nec—gemmas] Ironical.

32. Mathonis] He was an "eminent counsel" of the day; see Sat. vii.
 129. The "lectica," or litter, came into common use under the empire, both for men and women, and was frequently of great size. Cf. Sat.
 iii. 240, and lines 64, 65 of this satire. It allowed the occupant to Aut Lugdunensem rhetor dicturus ad aram.

 Pupilli prostantis? et hic damnatus inani

recline at length, and was thus distinguished from its varieties, the 'sella,' in which he could only sit, and the 'cathedra,' l. 65, in which he half reclined and half sat. In Matho's case, this display was perhaps requisite to procure him practice (see Sat. vii. 129. 135—145, and note on l. 129); but it seems to have harmonized with the man's character. See Sat. xi. 34. Mart. Ep. iv. 81; x. 46, which imply something of the "Serjeant Buz-fuz" style.

33. plena ipso] Because he was so fat.

ib. magni delator amici] The Stoic Heliodorus, an informer ('delator') in the reign of Nero. He procured the destruction of his own pupil Licinius Silanus.

35, 36. (Baebius) Massa—Carus (Mettius)] Also "delatores," under Domitian; "whom even Massa fears."

36. Thymele—Latinus] Actors of pantomime in Domitian's reign; the latter also his spy and favourite. They acted together, usually as the jealous husband and inconstant wife of comedy. Sat. vi. 44; viii. 197.

ib. submissa] "sent;" to propitiate Heliodorus.

37. submoveant] The technical term for the lictors making way for a consul. Hor. Od. ii. 16. 10, "neque consularis summovet lictor." Here it of course means not the lictor, but the consul himself; "order you aside."

ib. testamenta merentur] transl. "serve for their legacies;" i. e. discharge degrading offices.

40. unciolam—deuncem] Fractions from $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{1}{12}$, with their reduced amounts, $\frac{1}{4}$, &c., were often called by the names of the 12 parts of the 'as' (see Smith's Dict. Ant. 'as') instead of using a numeral. Thus here, 'unciolam' for 'unciam' is $\frac{1}{12}$; 'deuncem' $\frac{1}{6}$. This was especially the case in stating the shares taken by the respective 'haeredes' under a will. So Cicero pro Caecina: "facit haeredom ex deunce et semuncia Caecinam;"—"haeres' of $1\frac{1}{2}$ twelfths.

42. sanguinis] transl. "his life."

44.] Caligula instituted rhetorical contests at Lugdunum (Lyon). They were held at an altar dedicated to Augustus. Cf. Sat. xv. 111.

47. pup. prostantis] transl. "his prostituted ward." The spoliator is unknown; but the plunder of a ward by his guardian (tutor) was sufficiently common. From a comparison of Sat. x. 222, 223, and xv.

Flaminiam; (puer Automedon nam lora tenebat,

135—137, it would seem to have become the specific meaning of the term 'circumscriptio'; which in earlier Latin means cozenage of any kind.

49. Marius (Priscus)] Proconsul in Africa, and convicted of "repetundae" (see Maclean ad loc.) under Trajan.

ib. ab octava] sub. "hora." This was properly the hour for taking the bath, the "coena" not being taken till an hour afterwards.

49, 50. fruitur dis iratis] "Quite enjoys their displeasure."

50. victrix provincia] scil. Africa; see on l. 49.

51. Venusina] "Horatian;" from his birth-place, Venusia in Apulia.

ib. lucerna] lamp: by the light of which he wrote, and so, his satire. We should say "the Horatian pen," but the classical use is retained in the word "lucubration," and also in a phrase, now somewhat antiquated, of a composition "smelling of the lamp," i. e. over-elaborated.

52, 53. Heracle.—Diom.] sub. "fabulas."

53, 54. mugitum—volentem] The stories of Theseus, Icarus, and Daedalus.

55, 56.] "When the husband, (who has sold his wife's honour), takes the adulterer's 'haereditas' in trust for her; since (si) she, as an adulteress, cannot be a 'haeres' herself." This was under a law of Domitian. See Suet. Dom. 8. The reference might possibly be to the Lex Voconia, by which a wife could not take an "haereditas" if her husband's census exceeded a certain amount. But there would be no special point in this. Domitian's law only applied to a convicted adulteress; but it is obvious that in a case like the present, there would be the risk of a conviction at any time.

56, 57.] "well schooled to look at the ceiling, or snore, with still wakeful nostril, over his cup," i. e. while the wife and her paramour exchange caresses.

58.] See note on Sat. vii. 88, 89; x. 94.

59. qui—praesepebus] Perhaps Cornelius Fuscus, Sat. iv. 112; and cf. Sat. viii. 146—157.

61. Flaminiam] sub. "viam." The road to Ariminum in Umbria.

ib. puer — tenebat] "For he (Fuscus) a boy-Automedon used to hold the reins." He had driven Nero's chariot as a boy. Automedon, the charioteer of Achilles, is used for a charioteer generally.

Ipse lacernatae quum se jactaret amicae)

 Aude aliquid brevibus Gyaris et carcere dignum, Si vis esse aliquis: probitas laudatur et alget:
 Criminibus debent hortos, praetoria, mensas, 75

62. Ipse] i. e. Nero; literally "the great man;" as αὐτός is used of Socrates by a pupil, Aristoph. Nub. 220.

ib. lacernatae—amicae] "while he made himself agreeable to his cloaked favourite," a youth named Sporus.

63. ceras] (we should say "pages") for 'ceratas tabulas.' These were the folding tablets, usually of wood, and covered with wax on the inner surface, on which the Romans wrote what was not intended for publication;—published works (libri) were written on papyrus or membrana (see note on l. 5, 6), as being less liable to be defaced. 'Tabula,' sing., is any smoothed surface, (see l. 90 and note,) but usually a picture; 'tabulae, arum' (plur.) are always the writing-tablets above described. 'Codex' (lit. a block of wood) is identical in meaning with the latter, but is usually restricted to accounts and legal documents. See Sat. vii. 109, 110; x. 236.

64, 65.] A litter borne by six slaves, and with the curtains drawn back, so that the whole couch was visible. See note on l. 32, "lectica."

66. referens de] Resembling.

ib. supino] voluptuous; lit., lying on the back; the posture of indolent persons. Maecenas was notoriously effeminate. Cf. Sat. xii. 39.

67, 68. Signator] Sealer (of forged wills). It is not known who is meant. For 'tabulis,' see note on l. 63;—wills were usually written on them. Cf. Sat. iv. 19.

67. falso] "by fraud." 'Tabulis—gemma:' with . . .; abl. of the means.

68. uda] Wetted; for making an impression on the wax.

69—72.] Cf. Sat. vi. 659.

69. Calenum] From Cales in Campania.

70. viro—sitiente] abl. absolute.

71. rudes] "less educated."

ib. melior Locusta] "an improved Locusta." She was employed by Agrippina to poison Claudius. Sat. v. 148.

72. per famam et populum] An hendiadys. "The popular talk notwithstanding."

ib. nigros] "blackened" (with the effects of the poison).

73. Gyari, orum] One of the Cyclades in the Aegean;—otherwise Gyaros, and Gyara, æ. Under the empire, the Cyclades became a customary place of exile; see Sat. vi. 563.

ib. brevibus] "narrow."

75. praetoria] "palaces." Origi nally, 'praetorium,' probably with 'tentorium' understood, meant the consul's quarters in camp; consul and praetor being at first identical. It then came to mean the "government-house," i. e. the praetor's or proconsul's residence, in a provincial capital; and thus any palace, or large building.

76. argentum] "plate."

ib. stantem extra] "standing out on." The cup had a figure ('crusta') of a goat in high relief. See Maclean as to these "crustae," which were moveable.

77, 78. nurus—adulter] "the seducer of his own gold-craving daughter-in-law" (he has corrupted her with gifts); "the dishonoured wives and adulterer in robes of office." The toga praetexta (i. e. the "bordered toga," but for which 'praetexta' alone is generally used) had a broad purple stripe or border. It was the distinctive dress (1) of all the magistrates, excepting perhaps the tribunes of the people, censors, and quaestors: (2) of children of both sexes. Girls wore it until marriage, and boys up to the age of 'pubertas' (fourteen or thereabouts), when they assumed the 'toga virilis.' From the last-mentioned use of the 'praetexta,' the word has been rendered here "the boy adulterer," as having more point.

80. Cluvenius] An indifferent poet, only known from this passage.

82. montem—sortes poposcit] See Ov. Met. i. 316—321; 367—383. The mountain was Parnassus, and the oracle whose response ('sortes') was required, that of Themis. 'Sortes' is the Italian type of an oracular response, which was given, especially in the temple of Fortuna, by drawing lots from a coffer. The Greek responses, at Dodona, Delphi, &c., were oral.

83.] Cf. Ov. Met. i. 399—402, "Ponere duritiem coepere (scil. saxa) . . . Molliriue mora, mollitae ducere formam." Juvenal has improved on his original.

86. discursus] "inquietude;" lit. "running to and fro."

ib. libelli] "volume;" see note on l. 5, 6. So Hor. Sat. i. 10. 92, "I, puer, atque meo citus haec subscribe libello."

88. sinus] The fold of the toga over the breast, where the purse was kept. "When swelled wider (i. e. to pocket its gains) the toga-fold of avarice p?"

ib. alea] sub. "habuit." For the prevalence of gaming, see Maclean ad loc.

89. loculi, orum] (always plural in this sense.) A portable cash-box, opposed to the strong-box, "arca," l. 90. Cf. Sat. xi. 26.

90. tabulae] "the gaming-table." See note on l. 63.

ib. posita] "staked."

91. dispensatore — armigero] abl. absolute. "With the steward of the estate for armour-bearer." The "arms" were the money staked, and the player's man of business was there to supply it.

92. Simplexne furor] "Is it mere common madness?"

ib. sestertia centum] See note on l. 106.

93. perdere] scil. at the gaming-table above mentioned.

94 seqq.] A fresh ground of complaint;—the selfish luxury of the rich.

ib. fercula] "courses." See Maclean ad loc.

95. avus] i. e. 'ex avis.'

95—146.] amplifies the words "fercula septem secreto coenavit." From 95—134 describes the contest at the door for the meagre "sportula;" from 134—146 describes the patron's own supper indoors. The "sportula" was originally a dole of food, intended as a substitute for the invitations to dinner which a client expected from his patron. See Sat. v. 12—18. The name was derived from the basket ('sportula') in which the dole was carried off. It became an every-day part of Roman life; see Sat. iii. 246 seq., x. 46; and it would appear from this passage, that there were noble and even official candidates for it. Eventually, money was given instead of the food.

96. turbæ togatae] Under the empire the habitual use of the "toga" in the city, which had before been universal, became confined to the aristocracy; see note on Sat. iii. 172. On state occasions, however, it was still worn by the middle and lower classes; and the reception of the 'sportula' was one of these. See Mar. Ep. xiv. 125, "Attrita veniet sportula saepe toga."

97. Ille] The butler.

98. Suppositus] Counterfeiting some one else.

100. Ipsos Trojugenas] The 'ancienne noblesse' itself. The term refers to the distinction which under the empire was still kept up between patricians of the "majorum" and "minorum gentium" respectively. Originally, the former meant the two patrician tribes of the Ramnes and Tities, who dated from the foundation of Rome, while the "minorum gentium" families were those of the more recently added Luceres. As fresh additions were made, however, the Luceres themselves were promoted to the "majorum gentium," and the newly-admitted patricians became "minorum" in their turn, and the same process was from time to time repeated. A still further change took place under the later republic and empire, when an aristocracy arose, founded on mere personal desert. At first, indeed, something of an hereditary character was given even to this by the line drawn between the "nobiles" and "novi homines;" see note on Sat. viii. 237; but gradually even this disappeared, and the distinction became purely personal. The new aristocracy thus created was regarded by the old families with great jealousy. As an expression of it, they transferred to the recent creations the invidious term "minorum gentium," while they themselves now, as a body, appropriated the name and traditions of the "majorum gentium." The latter of course included their Trojan descent; although in strictness this only belonged to the Ramnes, who were instituted by Romulus.

104. fenestras] Holes pierced for the earrings—a badge of servitude in the East.

105. quinque tabernae] See note on Sat. vii. 220, 221.

106. quadringenta] Large amounts were computed at Rome by sestertii, as in France now by francs. The sestertius ("semis tertius," the "third a half," i. e. two and a half) was $\frac{1}{4}$ of the denarius, = 2½ asses. Its symbol is H.S. (or II*;) i. e. two; and S. for semis. To expedite the computation,

(a) 1000 sestertii were called "sestertium" (perhaps not used in fact):

(b) 2000 to 999,000 were called "duo sestertia," &c.; or, "duo &c., millia (sub. 'sestertiorum');" or else (as here "quadringenta") the numeral was used alone; (sub. "millia sestertiorum.")

(c) For 1,000,000 and upwards, the numeral adverbs were used, after which "centena millia sestertiorum" is understood; thus "decies" (centena millia sest.) = 1,000,000. To translate these sums of decies and upwards rapidly, take off a cypher, and add a million; thus vices, 20, and taking off the "0," 2 million. The word 'sestertium,' which is sometimes written after the "millia," is always the contracted genitive plur. from sestertius. When written in numerals, a stroke over the numeral shows that it is the adverb, and therefore "centena millia" understood. Thus H.S.M. 1000 sestertii; H.S.M̄. "millies centena millia sestertiorum," = 100,000,000 sestertii.

ib. quadringenta parant] Give me a knight's income. See note on Sat. iii. 154, 155.

Claudius, and Licinus, freedman of Augustus, were both proverbially wealthy. Cf. Sat. xiv. 306.

110. sacro honori] The tribunes of the people, who were inviolable ; "sacro sancti," Liv. ii. 33.

111. pedibus albis] Newly imported slaves were chalked on the foot ("gypsati pedis," Ov. Am. i. 8. 62) ; why, or on what part of it, is uncertain. It is said to have been on the sole ; but query ?

116.] The reference is probably to the old temple of Concord, erected by Camillus, and re-consecrated by Tiberius. The building was full of birds' nests, and therefore "Concord, (i. e. her temple,) sounded with greetings to the nest," on the birds returning home to their young. For the temples of the divinities in l. 115, see Maclean ad loc.

120, 121. densissima—petit] The "dense (i. e. densely crowded) litterers ask their hundred quadrantes." "Densissima lectica" is for the plur. 'lecticae.'

121. quadrantes] See Dict. Antig. 'as.'

123. Hic] Here is one who ('absenti,' sub. 'uxori') asks for a wife who is not there at all ; pretending that she is in the litter.

126. Profer—caput] The words of the butler.

128—130. jurisque peritus Apollo . . . triumphales] sub. "statuae." The forum contained an ivory statue of Apollo, and figures of eminent men placed there by Augustus. 'Tituli' are the inscriptions on the latter.

128. juris peritus] From hearing so much of it there.

130. Arabarches] Probably, prefect of the 'Αράβιος νόμος, in Egypt. Crispinus (l. 27) is perhaps intended.

133. deponunt] "give up as hopeless."

ib. longissima] "longest-lived."

136. rex] The patron. Sat. v. 14.

ib. vacuis—jacebit] "And will recline with only himself on the empty couches." This use of 'tantum' is rare.

137. orbibus] "Tables;" as in Sat. xi. 122; lit. the circular top of the table. Under the empire, each guest had a separate table, which was carried in and out at the courses, with the dishes upon it; so that the word is equivalent to "courses." Here the rich man has them all served, as if he had company. The ancient usage was the 'triclinium'; see note on Sat. v. 17.

138. mensa] "meal."

140, 141. quae—apros] "Which serves up to itself boars whole." Cf. Hor. Sat. ii. 3. 243; 8. 6.

142. Poena tamen praesens] sub. "est." "However, retribution is upon you."

143. crudum] "Undigested." The custom of taking a bath after the 'coena' (see note on l. 49, "ab octava") was begun by Nero.

153. dic. nomen] "even to mention the name."

154—157. Mucius] i. e. one of the old nobility. "They would probably not be offended at it : But what good is that ?—Delineate Tigellinus and you will be tortured." Tigellinus was Nero's favourite and accomplice in the burning of Rome : hence the reference in l. 155—157.

155—157.] There is a difficulty in this passage, from the verb in the last line. Either "diducis" must be read, and joined with the future "lucebis ;" or "diducit," joined with the plural "fumant." The meaning is however clear. The tortures described were those inflicted on the Christians by Nero, on the charge of having caused the great fire of Rome, A.D. 65 (Tac. Ann. xv. 38. 44) : l. 156, is the burning at the stake, a sword being placed under the chin, so that they stood "with rigid (fixo) neck :—" l. 157, is the dragging on a hurdle to the place of execution. Probably it is best to adopt "diducis," and keep the strict future and present force of the two verbs. The rendering will then be "you are on your way to blaze (lit. you will blaze) in that torch in which the wretches stand and burn, who smoke with rigid neck, and you are already scooping a wide furrow in the mid-sand ;" i. e. on the hurdle.

155. taeda] The words of Tacitus (l. c. above) are "in usum nocturni luminis urerentur."

159. plumis] "down ;" (lit. feathers :)—the stuffed cushion of the 'lectica.' 'Pensilibus ;' because carried on the bearer's shoulders. Translate "aloft on down."

161. Accusator erit] sub. "ejus, qui," &c. "There will soon be some one to inform against him."

163, 164.] "You may compose on mythical subjects (cf. l. 2—11) as you will."

163. Committas] "Pit," i. e. make them to do battle in verse, as Virgil did. The term was used properly of gladiators.

2. audent] sub. "disserere."

3.] The reference is probably to M. Curius Dentatus, the conqueror of Pyrrhus. Cf. Hor. Ep. i. l. 64 ('maribus Curiis').

4. primum] "to begin with."

ib. gypso] i. e. busts of that material.

5. Chryssippi] A well-known Stoic, pupil of Cleanthes, and often spoken of as if he had founded the school. See Hor. Sat. 3. 34, "Chryssippi porticus et grex." It was really founded by Zeno, the master of Cleanthes.

6. similem] "counterpart;" i. e. an exact likeness.

23. rectus—albus] i. e. let their opposites, not their counterparts, sneer at &c.

25.] Cf. Sat. vi. 283, "Clames licet, et mare coelo Confundas, hominum sum." The phrase is from Virg. Aen. v. 790.

27. Cat. Cethegum] Note on Sat. viii. 232.

28. tab. Sullae] The famous "proscription," lit. "list." After the battle under the walls of Rome (B.C. 82), which finally crushed the Marian party, Sulla, who was now master of Rome, published lists of outlawry ('proscriptio'), comprising all the leading names of the opposite faction. The property of any one thus named was ipso facto confiscated, and he might be killed with impunity. Several thousands perished in the "Reign of Terror" thus established.

ib. discipuli tres] i. e. the triumvirate of Antony, Lepidus, and Augustus. It was formed B.C. 43; avowedly, to prosecute the war against the murderers of Caesar, but really in furtherance of the designs of Augustus, who thought it best to temporize with Antony. The triumvir commenced by a proscription of the republican party almost as bloody as that of Sulla; hence "discipuli."

29. adulter] Domitian, who seduced his niece Julia, the granddaughter of Vespasian. See Macleane ad loc.

29, 30. tragico—concubitu] Translate, "by a frightful connexion:" lit. "tragic;" i. e. as fit a subject for tragedy as Oedipus.

30. leges revocabat amaras] Re-enacted the Lex Julia (of Augustus) 'de adulteriis' (l. 37).

31. ipsis—timendas] Note on Sat. x. 314.

34. ultima] "extreme." 'Vitia' used for those who practise them.

34, 35.] "these counterfeit Scauri;" i. e. great men; as in Hor. Od. i. 12. 37, "Regulum et Scauros referam." The reference is to the two M. Aemilii Scauri, father and son; the former censor and twice consul, and the latter famous for his magnificent celebration of the public games in his aedileship, B.C. 58.

42. tabernae] Note on Sat. vii. 220, 221 (extr.).

43. vexantur] "are raked up."
ib. leges ac jura] "enactments and rules of law."

At Rome, as with ourselves, the primary sources of law were twofold: legislative enactment ("lex"), our "statute" or "written" law, and immemorial custom ("mos"), our "common," "customary," or "unwritten" law; whether as affecting the whole community, or particular places or persons. The "lex" was of course comprised in the collection of "leges" like our "Acts of Parliament;" while the "mos" was ascertained by authoritative decisions either affirming or implying it. In this sense the terms are distinguished by Horace, "Mos et lex maculosum edomuit nefas." Od. iv. 5. 22.

Besides these two sources, however, there will necessarily be a third, viz. the development of the general principles, both of "lex" and "mos," by their application, in the course of litigation, to the features of particular cases: thus, practically, evolving from day to day, a body of new law. With us, this is the exclusive province of the Law Courts, whose decisions, until reversed, are of binding authority in all similar cases. At Rome, as on the Continent now, the decisions of the Courts had not this force; but on the other hand, the greatest weight was attached to the opinions of 'juris consulti,' which came to the same thing.

Combining the above remarks, it will be seen that what the law in fact was on any given point, would be ascertained, partly from the written "leges," (with which may be classed "senatus consulta," and praetors' edicts,) and partly from these authoritative expositions as well of the "mos" itself as of the developments in detail both of the "mos" and "lex." The entire body of law thus ascertained was "jus," or "jus civile." 'Leges' and 'jura' were its subdivisions, the former comprising what was ascertained from the written law; the latter, what was ascertained from the other sources above referred to. (It should be observed, that 'jura' means also the several provisions of a 'lex'.)

44. Scatinia] sub. "lex." An early law against effeminate persons; the 'molles' of l. 47.

46. junctae umbone (for 'umbonibus'; i. e. 'clypeis') phalanges] The well-known 'testudo,' made by joining the shields, under cover of which a scaling party advanced to the assault. The meaning here of course is, "your number and combination protects you."

53. comedunt—paucae] i. e. turn athletes. See Dict. 'coliphia.'

55. praegnantem stamine] "big with the thread wound round it."

57. horrida—pellex] "Some dirty female slave;" lit. concubine. The slave who excited her mistress's jealousy, was often set to spin at the "codex;"—a wooden log, to which one leg was attached, so that it was practically equivalent to the "stocks."

67. Cretice] See on Sat. viii. 38. The name is used for one of the nobility generally.

68, 69. Proculas—Pollineas—Labulla—Carfinia] Licentious characters of the day.

69. talem] so thin; i. e. the "multicia" (see Dict.) of l. 66.

86, 87. Bonam deam] The goddess Fauna, who was worshipped at Rome under this name. Her festival was on 1st of May, and was confined to women, the Vestal Virgins having charge of the arrangements. Originally, it seems to have been of an innocent character, but it degenerated under the empire. See Sat. vi. 314 sq.

87—89.] Men were excluded from the worship of the Bona Dea (see above). In the male parody on the rite, the rule was reversed.

87. sinistro] "left-handed;" i. e. reversing the ordinary practice.

92. Cotytto] A Thracian deity, whose worshippers were called βάρται, from the purifications connected with her festival. Her worship had been imported to Athens, whence "Cecropiam" here. The festival was attended with much excess, and originally involved, like those of Bacchus and Cybele, a retirement to some mountainous district.

93. fuligine] Dark colouring matter, lit. soot, usually made of antimony (stibium).

94. obliqua] "slanting."

ib. producit] "lengthens out."

95. attollens] lifting the lids.

ib. Priapo] A drinking-cup in the figure of the god: contrasted with the female attire in the next lines.

97. rasa] sub. "vestimenta." Smooth, lit. scraped. The cloth worn by ladies had a smooth surface (Gr. ξίμαι); men wore it with the nap on ('pexa').

 manners, society, Hic turpis Cybeles et fracta voce loquendi

100. Actoris Aurunci spol.] Verbatim from Virg. Aen. xii. 93. "Spoil of a slain warrior;" used of course here in parody.

ib. ille] Otho.

100, 101. quo—armatum] "with which he saw himself (took care to be) equipped."

101. vexilla] These were the colours of the 'manipuli,' or subdivisions of the 'cohort.' The colours of the 'cohort' itself were "signa," and the standard of the whole legion was its "aquila" or "eagle." As the movements of the troops were entirely regulated by their standards, the phrase, 'tollere signa' (or as here 'vexilla') came to mean "to march."

102. novis] "modern."

104—106.] Otho revolted from Galba, and the latter was killed by a private soldier in the insurgent army. Otho was then proclaimed emperor (A.D. 69), and marched against Vitellius, by whom his troops were defeated about 20 miles from Bebricum, a town between Verona and Cremona. The battle was named from Bebricum, because Otho's army had been encamped there. "Curare cutem" is of course in forcible contrast to "occidere Galbam."—as l. 107 is to 106.

106. affectare] "to aim at."

ib. Palatī] See note on Sat. iv. 31,

107.] Fops, like Otho, instead of washing the face, used for it a paste of bread and asses' milk. Cf. Sat. vi. 461, 462, 468—473.

108, 109.] "which not even the voluptuous Semiramis or Cleopatra were in the habit of doing." "Moesta" and "Actiaca carina" are added in the way of epithets only to Cleopatra;—not that she had any special reason for then using the 'pressum panem.'

110. Hic] In this society.

ib. reverentia mensae] i. e. the mutual respect of host and guests; "the decencies of society."

111.] Construe, "Hic (est) turpis libertas Cybeles, et fracta voce loquendi:"—"licence of the rites of Cybele:" lit., "of Cybele and speaking with tremulous voice." The rites are first described, by the falsetto in which they were celebrated. Then the two clauses, "Cybele and her rites," stand by an hendiadys (like "pateris libamus et auro" for "pat. aureis") for "the rites of Cybele." The public festival of Cybele was the Megalesia; see note on Sat. xi. 193. She had also a temple on the Palatine (see Sat. iii. 137, and note), where her worship was kept up by the emaculated Galli. And they would seem from this passage, and Sat. vi. 511 sq., to have celebrated their rites in private houses as well.

 Sudavit clypeis ancilibus. O pater Urbis,

112. phanaticus] Priest (of Cybele). This is perhaps the first meaning of the word (which should thus be written fanaticus). It was the ordinary appellation of her priests and those of Bellona. For the secondary meaning of the word see note on Sat. vi. 511, 512.

113, 114. magni—magister] "a model of a large swallow, and worth hiring as teacher of it." He was a voracious eater.

117. quadringenta sest.] See note on Sat. i. 106. This was the amount of fortune required for the 'equestris ordo.' See note on Sat. iii. 154, 155. Gracchus, a dissolute noble of the day, had gone through a mock marriage to a husband, and tendered this sum as the "dos" (wife's portion).

118.] "To some performer on the cornu or tuba." The former was curved, the latter straight, hence "recto." "Cantaverat," "performed;" used both of vocal and instrumental music. See Sat. x. 210, 211.

119. tabulae] sub. "dotis." The marriage-contract or sponsalia, which was written on tablets, (see note on Sat. i. 63,) and signed by both parties before the marriage. See Sat. vi. 25 and note.

121. haruspice] "a soothsayer:" i. e. "is it a crime or a 'lusus naturae,'" like those 'referred to in l. 123. Cf. Sat. xiii. 62—70; and see note there for "haruspex," who was summoned on the occurrence of these prodigies.

124. segmenta—longos habitus—flammea] i. e. the bridal costume. The "longos habitus" are the bride's dress, which was white. The "segmenta" are the flounces of this dress. The "flammeum" was a veil of bright yellow colour, which gave it its name. Cf. Sat. vi. 225; x. 334.

125, 126. Arcano—ancilibus] "He (assumes this bridal dress) who has sweated under the ancile shields, as he carries those sacred (emblems) swaying by their mystic thong." The ancilia were the 12 sacred shields of Mars, which were carried in procession by the Salii on the Kalends of March. The shield was suspended from the bearer's shoulder by a leather thong ('lorum' here), and he danced and struck it with a rod in tune. Originally, there was one shield only, which had been found in Numa's palace, and was supposed to have fallen from heaven. The other eleven were counterparts, to prevent theft, as the commonwealth was to last as long as the sacred shield was kept. The Salii were always selected from good families.

127. Latiis pastoribus] Like "rusticus tuus," Sat. iii. 67.

128. Gradive] The name of Mars in his capacity as god of war. His other names were Quirinus and Silvanus, in the former of which he was viewed as the patron of Rome; in the latter, as the patron of fields and flocks. Apparently, this latter was the original Italian conception, on which the attributes of the Greek Ἄρης were afterwards engrafted. The etymology of the name Gradivus is as uncertain as the quantity of the first syllable, which is long in Virgil (as here) and short in Ovid.

ib. urtica] Translate "this mania."

129. traditur] "given away" (as wife).

131. patri] i. e. to Jupiter, the father of Mars.

132.] The Campus Martius, dedicated to that deity. See on Sat. vi. 524, 525. It is called 'severi,' as being the place for warlike and athletic exercises.

132, 133. Officium—Quirini] The speech of some citizen to his friend, who answers in l. 134. 'In valle Quirini,' i. e. under the Quirinal hill.

134. nubit] Of course used properly only of the wife.

136. acta] The "daily press" of Rome, but published by government, like our Gazette. It contained the proceedings of public bodies, law and police reports, and births, deaths, and marriages. While J. Caesar was in power, the debates in the senate were also reported in it.

143. Gracchi] A noble who had turned "retarius." See note on "retia misit," l. 148. The same person is referred to Sat. viii. 199—210.

ib. tunicati fuscina] See note on Sat. viii. 200—208.

145. generosior] In the strict sense of the word;—"nobly born."

ib. Capitolinis] The descendants of T. Manlius Torquatus Capitolinus, who saved the Capitol from the Gauls.

ib. Marcellis] The well-known family of the Claudia gens.

146. Catulis, Paullis] Cognomina of the Lutatia and Aemilia gens respectively.

ib. Fabiis] See l. 155, note.

ib. minoribus] Descendants.

147. podium] The "reserved seats" in the amphitheatre. Properly, it means the wall which ran round the arena, to protect the spectators from the wild beasts. The arena was itself excavated, and the top of the 'podium' 18 feet above its level. The more distinguished spectators occupied three tiers of reserved seats. These were immediately behind the 'podium,' and also called by that name, which has descended to our "pew." The other spectators occupied the higher tiers of benches.

147. ipsum] "The emperor himself:" whether Nero or Domitian is uncertain. 'Admoveas:' i. q. 'adjungas.'

148. munere] A show of gladiators was a "munus;"—to exhibit one was "munus edere," and the exhibitor "editor" or "munerator."
ib. retia misit] Note on Sat. viii. 200—208.

149—159.] "Of course, no one now-a-days believes in an existence after death. But just for argument assume its truth;—what must the dead think of us?"

150. contum] The pole of Charon. "Ipse ratem conto subigit." Virg. Aen. vi. 302.

152. nisi qui—lavantur] Children were admitted free to the public baths.
ib. aere] The "quadrans;" see Diet. Antig. 'as.' This was the customary price for admission to the public baths. Cf. Sat. vi. 447.

153. Curius] See note on l. 3.
 155. Cremerae legio] The Fabia gens. During the Veientine war, the whole gens, headed by the consul Kaeso, established a military fort on the Cremera, which flows into the Tiber a few miles N. of Rome. After two years they were cut off by the Veientes, with the exception of one boy, who had been left in Rome. The above is the legendary account.

158.] At a 'lustratio' sulphur was burnt, and those present sprinkled from laurel-boughs dipped in water. Special sacrifices were also offered. For 'lustratio,' see note on Sat. xiii. 63.

159. Illuc—traducimur] "Down there our character is quite gone." Lit. "thither" (i. e. to the great of antiquity) we "are traduced." 'Traducere' is to lead by (in procession). Hence, exhibit, make notorious, and from this latter meaning, "defame" or "traduce." Another rendering is, "To this point of infamy we are brought." But it is feeble.

160. Juvernæ] Ireland. For the probable date of the Satire in connexion with these lines, see Maclean's loc.

161. minima contentos nocte Britan- nos] From the shortness of the summer night in high latitudes. It would seem from this passage, and a similar one in Tacitus (Agric. 12), that this was popularly believed to be the case throughout the year. Tacitus, at any rate, suggests an explanation which is inconsistent with any other view. He says, that the extremities of the earth are less mountainous than its centre, and therefore throw shorter shadows!

163—168.] Translate, "And yet one, the Armenian Zalates, weaker than the other youths of his country, is said to have gratified our eager Tribune." Caligula is meant by "tribunus" (sub. plebis);—it was one of the offices concentrated in the emperors.

166. commercias] "intercourse."

167. Hic fiunt homines] Ironically.

169. braccæ &c.] Usual presents to favourites.

170. praetextatos—mores] "those of our Roman youth." See note on Sat. i. 78. For another rendering, see Maclean ad loc.

ib. Artaxata] The Armenian capital.

LIFE IN ROME.

The last words of Umbri-cius.

Nunc sacri fontis nemus et delubra locantur

2. vacuis] Cumae was a quiet old town, on the road to ("janua," l. 4) the more fashionable Baiae; about four miles N.W. of it.

3. Sibyllae] "Euboicis Cumarum allabitur oris . . . horrendaeque procul secreta Sibyllae, Antrum immane, petit." Virg. Aen. vi. init.

4, 5.] "And an attractive coast of pleasant retirement."

5. Prochytae] Now Procida; off Cape Misenum. See Maclean's description of this island.

ib. Suburae] A street of low shops (principally green-grocers') running from the Forum to the Esquiline hill.

9. Augusto rec. men. poetas] See note on Sat. i. 1—18.

11. substitit] Umbri-cius had walked on before the furniture-van (rheda), and now waited for it at the Appian-road gate. "Capenam;" from its leading to Capua.

ib. veteres arcus] Probably the arched tomb of Horatia, which was near this gate. Livy i. 16.

ib. madidam] An aqueduct (the Aqua Appia) entered the city near the gate.

12. noctur. amicae] i. e. the nymph Egeria, one of the Camenae. She was alleged by Numa to have instructed him in the religious ceremonies he instituted. The grove near the Porta Capena was perhaps not the original scene of these interviews: cf. Livy, i. 21.

ib. constituebat] "made his assignments."

13. delubra] shrine (of the Camenae). See note on l. 16.

13. locantur] "Are farmed out :"
 the correlative term to "conducere."
 See note on l. 31, 'conducere.'

14. quorum — supellex] "whose whole chattels are a basket and wisp of hay :"—the former to go begging with, the latter to sleep on.

15. mercedem] "rent." 'Pen-dere,' "produce," lit. "pay."

16. silva mendicat] i. e. its occupants do. The Jews went out begging and fortune-telling (see Sat. vi.
 543) all day, and returned to the wood to sleep.

ib. ejectis Camenis] The grove was consecrated to the four Camenae, Egeria being herself one. See above.
 These Camenae are not the same as "the Muses," although confounded with them by the later Roman poets.
 The names of the other three are Carmenta, Antevorta, and Postvorta.

20. ingenuum] "the natural (lit.
 'home-born') tufa ;" i. e. the rock from which the spring flowed, opposed to the 'marmora,' which had been brought there to ornament the margin. Cf. Virgil's "vivoque sedi- lia saxo," Aen. i. 167.

25.] See Virg. Aen. vi. 14 seqq. :
 "Daedalus, ut fama est, fugiens Minoia regna . . . Redditus his primum terris, tibi, Phoebe, sacravit Remigium alarum." 'His terris,'
 i. e. Cumae.

27. Dum superest Lach. quod torqueat] "While Lachesis has something left to spin (lit. turn) ;" i. e.
 "while I have some life left." In the Roman writers all the three fates, Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropis, spun the thread of human destiny. In the Greek poets this is the office of Clotho only. In Homer there is usually only one Μοῖρα, who has no other name.

29, 30. Arturius—Catulus] Rich contractors of the day, of low origin.

31. aedem—flumina, portus] sub.
 "faciendam, -da, -dos." 'Aedes,' being singular, is "a temple."

ib. conducere] "to contract for."
 These public works were let out by the 'aediles' to contractors ('redemptores'). Cf. Hor. Ep. i. 1. 76, "Pars hominum gemit conducere publica." Under the empire the letting was managed by the 'curatores operum publicorum,' the office of 'aedile' having lost much of its importance. See note on l. 162.

31. flumina] The drainage of the surface or rain-water from a house into the public 'cloacae.' 'Flumen' is thus distinguished from 'stillicidium,' which was the private right of the running of water through the drain of an adjacent house.

32. siccandam eluvium] "emptying (lit. drying) a sewer."

ib. portandum—cadaver] This would be on some occasion of a public funeral.

33.] "And offer themselves ('caput') for sale under the despotic spear;" i. e. for sale by auction. A spear was stuck up when an auction was going on, much as with us a carpet is hung out of the window. The first auctions were probably for disposing of the booty taken in war, which would account for the spear being thus used. 'Domina,' because the article sold is peremptorily knocked down to the highest bidder. The line of course means, "do any servile work you choose."

34.] "These (men, who were) once 'cornicines,' &c."

ib. municipalis arenae] "of the provincial amphitheatre." There were gladiators' shows at the chief country-towns in Italy, as well as at Rome, each of which had its orchestral band. "Municipium" corresponds to our "country-town." Strictly, it is the term for such of the conquered or federated townships of Italy as retained an internal government of their own, while admitted at the same time (partially or altogether) to the Roman citizenship. The term came to be employed, however, where the internal self-government had ceased.

ib. arenas] See note on Sat. ii. 147, "podium."

35. buccae] The cheeks puffed out with blowing the 'cornu.'

36. munera] See note on Sat. ii. 148.

ib. verso pollice] The life of a conquered gladiator was literally in the hands of the spectators. If they wished him to live, they pressed down their thumbs. So Hor. Ep. i. 18. 66, "utroque tuum laudabit pollice ludum." If the contrary, they turned them up; hence 'verso.'

38. foricas] Public urinals and privies. The proper keeping of these was one of the objects of contract from the 'aediles' or 'curatores'; see note on l. 31. But there is ground for thinking that the word means a public "bonded warehouse" for goods, the dues from which were called 'foriculiarius.'

42, 43. motus astrorum] i. e. astrology. Cf. Sat. vi. 553—567.

43, 44. funus promittere patris]

Nec volo, nec possum : ranarum viscera numquam Inspexi. Ferre ad nuptam, quae mittit adulter, 45
 Quae mandat, norint alii ; me nemo ministro
 Fur erit, atque ideo nulli comes exeo, tamquam

"To promise the heir his father's speedy death ;" i. e. by astrological calculations or divinations. Cf. Sat. xiv. 248.

45. inspexi] i. e. in order to extract their venom. "I am no poison-dealer." 'Ranarum' means the 'rubeta.' See Sat. i. 70.

47. nulli comes exeo] "I now quit the city, as having no part in it."

48.] A Greek construction : "in respect of its withered right hand." For the more obvious abl. absolute.

49. nisi conscius] "unless in some secret." All accomplices in a crime, whether as principals, or by possessing the secret, were in Latin 'conscii.' Any one of such persons, as such, was "consciua." See Virg. Aen. ii. 99, "et quaerere conscius arma ;" scil. 'coepit Ulysses.'

53.] The Verres impeached by Cicero for his maladministration in Sicily ;—here used for any criminal.

54. opaci] dusky with the particles of gold.

61. Graecam urbem] "Rome turned Greek."

ib. quota portio] 'Quotus' is the numeral interrogative in Latin, always answered by an ordinal : e. g.

"quota hora?" answer "sexta."

Hence arise two classes of idiom. (1) As the Romans, like the Greeks, often expressed the cardinal numbers by the use of an ordinal (e. g. τετταρὸς αὐτόν— "four besides himself"),

"quotus" followed the same usage. Thus in Hor. Ep. i. 5. 30,

"quotus esse velis,"—"how many shall there be besides yourself?"

(2) In phrases like the text, where 'quota' is joined with 'pars' or 'portio,' and the answer would be an ordinal, determining the fraction.

Where it is meant to imply that the fraction would be next to nothing, the question asked by 'quota' is left unanswered, and it is equivalent to "how small a part it is."

ib. quota portio faecis Achaei]

"Although in fact how small a part is of the dregs of Greece?" The ingredients are far worse.

63, 64.] "Their tongue, their morals, and their music." "Chordas obliquas," "their slanting harp-strings." The eastern harp ('sambuca') had come into general use by this time. It was a large instrument, played on the ground, and resembling that with which we are familiar, or perhaps more like the rude Welsh harp. This explains the "obliquas," as the strings of a harp of course slant from the top to the bottom. This would strike a Roman eye particularly, the familiar 'lyra' having straight strings. "Chordas obliquas" cannot possibly mean the triangular-shaped τρίγωνον, which is often mentioned with the 'sambuca.'

64. gentilia] national.

65. ad Circum] The Circus Maximus, between the Palatine and Aventine hills. It was a low resort. See Sat. vi. 588. Women of the town hired vaults under the 'cavea' there.

66. lupa] "harlot." ('Ite,' 'there ye should go, who—')

74, 75.] "Specify what you think he (i. e. a Greek) is;—he will show you he is fifty other things."

76. aliptes] "bath-attendant;" lit. anointer. See on l. 262, 263.

77. schoenobates] i. e. 'funambulus.' See Sat. xiv. 266.

80. qui sumsit pennas] Daedalus. Juvenal follows Plutarch in making him an Athenian; by other accounts he was born at Crete, where he principally resided.

81. conchyliæ] "purples." Literally, the shell-fish from which the colour was obtained. The sense is, "Shall I not quit Rome, now these have become the great people there?"

81, 82. prior signabit—recumbet] i. e. take precedence of me on every occasion. 'Signabit:' as witness to any document.

94.] Female parts at the theatre were played by men.

98, 99. Antiochus—Stratocles, &c.] Famous Greek actors of the day. Stratocles and Demetrius are mentioned also by Quintilian, xi. 3. 178.

101. concutitur] sub. "Graecus."

103. endromiden] See note on Sat. vi. 246.

106. a facie jactare] "To kiss his hand to you." Lit. "to toss it 114, 115. transi gymnasia] "Inspect (lit. go through) the schools." Cf. Sat. vii. 190.

115. facinus majoris abollae] "The crime of one of wider cloak." The Stoic 'abolla' was more full than others.

rea Soranus, and his daughter Servilia, the former of seditious practices in Asia, the latter of consulting the Magi on her father's behalf. They were both executed, and Egnatius handsomely paid. He was afterwards brought to justice under Vespasian for this transaction. Barea had formerly been his pupil.

117, 118. ripa—caballi] i. e. at Tarsus. The town is said to have derived its name from a feather which fell from the wing of Pegasus. See Liddell and Scott's Gr. Lex. Τάρσος, ii. 3. Pegasus is called 'Gorgonei caballi,' because he sprung from the blood of the Gorgon Medusa, after Perseus had killed her.

119—125.] "As to paying court to great men, these foreigners leave us no chance."

120. Protog. &c. . . .] Names of well-known sycophanta.

123. exiguum de] "A small drop of," &c.

125. minor] Of less importance.

126—130.] He now quits the subject of the foreigners. "Even if they were away, what opening is there for a poor man to court the wealthy? Even the praetors contend for their favours." There were at this time seventeen praetors in the city.

129. orbis] Here, "childless widows;" the 'Albina' and 'Modia' of l. 130. Cf. Sat. iv. 18. 22; and note there.

ib. dudum vig.] "as they have been awake some hours." One mode of paying court to the wealthy was to send, the first thing in the morning, and inquire after their health ('salutet,' l. 130).

131.] A new ground of complaint. "Nothing will now go down at Rome but riches." 'Claudit latus,' "gives the wall to." In Horace's words (Sat. ii. 5. 17), "walks as 'comes exterior' to;"—equivalent to 'tegam latus,' l. 18.

132. alter] The rich slave.

132, 133.] Under the empire, there were six tribunes to each legion, who received 48 asses apiece per diem. The pay of the common soldier was 12 asses.

P. C. Scipio Nasica, who was selected as the most virtuous citizen of his time, to receive the statue of Cybele on its arrival at Ostia, B.C. 204. The statue was formerly at Pessinus in Galatia, but was moved to Rome by command of the Sibylline books, during the war with Hannibal. It was first placed in the temple of Victory, on the Palatine. Afterwards a temple of Cybele was erected there, and the festival of the Megalesia instituted in her honour. See Livy xxix. 14; xxxiv. 10.

138, 139. vel qui—Minervam] L. Caecilius Metellus. The temple of Vesta at Rome contained an image of Minerva, which the Romans held to be the original Trojan Palladium. When the temple was burnt, B.C. 241, Metellus rescued the image, but lost his eyesight in doing so.

144, 145. Samothracum—aras] i. e. those of the Cabiri. These were certain divinities worshipped in Samothrace, Lemnos, and Imbros. Their nature and attributes are extremely obscure. Originally they appear to have been, like the Corybantes and Curetes, attendants only on the inferior gods, especially on Cybele. Gradually their worship became confounded with hers, and, still more commonly, with that of Demeter and Persephone. In a still later mythology, the Cabiri were worshipped as identical with the Dioscuri (Castor and Pollux), and like them, protectors of travellers by land and sea. The Roman writers, on the other hand, supported their claim to be the "Penates," carried by Dardanus to Samothrace, and thence brought by Aeneas to Italy. The chief seat of their cult, however, continued to be Samothrace, where "mysteries" were celebrated in their honour. From the connexion with Demeter above referred to it is probable that these may have been an imitation of the μυστήρια of Eleusis.

146. ignoscentibus] Pardoning (because they do not care); "ignoring."

151. linum] The thread with which it is darned.

154, 155—159. de pulvino—sufficit

—Othoni] The "pulvinum equestre" (lit. knight's cushion) refers to the regulation of the "quatuordecim ordines" at the theatre. The latter, as regards the spectators' portion, consisted of semicircular tiers of benches arranged one above the other in front of the stage ('pulpitum'). It will be seen, that from the semicircular arrangement of the benches, a considerable space would be left between them and the stage. This was termed the 'orchestra'; and, in the Roman theatre, was occupied by the seats of the senate, foreign ambassadors, and other persons of distinction. In B.C. 68 a further appropriation was made by the Lex Roscia Theatralis, passed by L. Roscius Otho. By this fourteen rows of the tiers of benches immediately adjoining the 'orchestra' were cushioned and reserved for the 'equestris ordo.' See l. 159; and cf. Hor. Epod. 4. 16:

"Sedilibusque magnus in primis
 eques
 Othone contempto sedet."

The 'census equestris,' or qualification for that 'ordo,' was 400,000 sesterces; see note on Sat. v. 57; x. 94, 95. And cf. Hor. Ep. i. l. 58,

"Si quadringentis sex septem millia desunt Plebs eris."

Accordingly, it follows that 'sedere quatuordecim ordinibus' is equivalent to having this property; and so Sat. xiv. 323, 324. It should be observed that this semicircular arrangement of the benches at the theatre distinguished it from the amphitheatre, where they formed a complete circle round the arena. See note on Sat. ii. 147.

155. legi] i. e. the law of Otho above referred to.

158. cultos] "spruce."

ib. lanistae] A trainer of gladiators; cf. Sat. xi. 8. They were called his "familia," and his establishment itself "ludus." For 'pinnirapi,' see Dict.

161. sarcinulis] Lit. "bundles." It seems to have become a cant term for the 'dos' brought by a wife to her husband. So that 'impar' will be "unsuitable;" i. e. a bad match for. This is quite intelligible, without supposing any specific obligation in the husband to settle property equal to the 'dos' of the young lady ('puellæ').

162. quando in consilio est Aedilibus] Under the republic there were four aediles; two plebeian, who were appointed at the Mons Sacer, B.C. 494, and two curule (patrician), appointed B.C. 365. Their duties were nearly identical. They were police magistrates, commissioners of the markets, public buildings, and state lands, and directors of the festivals. Of the latter, the 'ludi magni' and 'Megalesia,' and the dramatic representations, were specially in charge of the curule aediles. In B.C. 45, two additional plebeian aediles were appointed. Under the empire, the aediles were police magistrates only, their other duties having been transferred to the 'curatores.' Hence, in this passage, 'Quando—aedilibus' means, "when is he (the poor man) asked to assist in hearing even a police case?" It was the habit of all Roman magistrates to invite persons to try the case with them; these were said "in consilio esse iudici, praetori," &c., and were called "assessores."

164, 165.] "A poor man does not easily 'rise' (emergere) anywhere; but at Rome," &c.

170. veneto] "bottle-green." For 'culullo,' see Lat. Dict.

171, 172.] All Roman citizens were entitled to wear the toga; but, in practice, it was habitually worn only in Rome itself, its use elsewhere being reserved for solemn occasions. Thus Cincinnatus, when nominated dictator as he was ploughing, "togam e tugurio proferre uxorem jubet." Liv. iii. 26. So here, 'nemo togam sumit, nisi "mortuus."' During the republic, it could not have been said "magna pars Italiae," as the above rule was universal. Under the empire, however, the use of the toga at all became confined to the upper classes, except on state occasions, when the lower orders still assumed it; see note on Sat. i. 96. It is probable that this may have led to its habitual use by the upper classes in the provincial towns and watering-places, thus reversing the former rule to this extent.

173.] See Sat. vi. 67 and note.

174. pulpita] The stage: properly, the front part of it only.

175. exodium] "interlude;"—the genitive 'Atellanae' (i. e. 'fabulae') being understood. See Sat. vi. 71, where the full phrase is given; and see too Livy vii. 2, "exodia conserta fabellis Atellanis." For the 'Atellanae fabulae,' see note on Sat. i. 3. Several of these were performed in the same day, and the 'exodia' (from ἐξ ὁδοῦ) were probably short humorous pieces, whether dramatic or otherwise, recited in the intervals. They may have served the purpose of the παραβάσις in Greek comedy; a satirical notice of events of the day, relieving the mind from the strain of continuous representation.

ib. personae] "mask;" its first meaning.

178. honoris] "office."

181. aliena arca] i. e. "alieno aere :—" "by borrowing."

184. Quid das] "What do you not pay?"

184, 185. Cossum—Veiento] Great men of the day; the latter, Domitian's favourite. See Sat. iv. 113. Cossum was a cognomen in the Cornelia gens.

185. clauso labello] "even if he does not speak to you."

186—189.] Other causes which make great men's acquaintance expensive. "You have to make presents on the fêtes even of their slaves."

186. barbam—crinem] These, when first cut, were devoted to the shrine of Aesculapius or Apollo, and the day kept as a festival. The technical term for this was "deponere crinem." Here, the master dignifies a pet slave ('amati') with this ceremony.

187. Plena d. lib. ven.] "One of these fête-days comes; and straightway the house is filled with &c."

lib. libis] Cakes of fine flour, honey, and oil. These were presented to the slave, and sold by him ('venalibus'), the proceeds going into his own pocket.

ib. accipe] "hear."

187, 188. et illud—habe] "And take home to you this cause for anger." Lit. 'this heaven.'

189. cultis] "pampered."

ib. peculia] A slave's private earnings, which practically were his own, although in strictness a slave could not hold property. They were often considerable enough to purchase his freedom. Cf. Sat. vii. 220, 221.

190—314.] The last complaint of Umbricius;—the physical drawbacks of Rome-life: viz. fall of houses (190—196); fires (197—222); bad and noisy lodgings (223—238); the streets (239—314).

190. ruinam] fall of a house. For descriptions of the places mentioned in this and the two next lines, see Maclean.

192. proni Tiburis] Horace says "Tibur supinum;" i. e. lit. 'lying on the back,' while "pronus" is lying on the face. Applied to place, both mean the same, "sloping." Tivoli slants steeply to the Anio.

193. tibicine] Props to a house were so called. How the word acquired this meaning is uncertain.

194. sic] By the 'tibicinea.'

ib. labentibus] sub. "aedibus."

195. villicus] The landlord's agent.

It is more usually the steward of a country property.

196. pendente—ruina] "With the ruin hanging about our ears."
 'Ruina' properly means the act of falling, as in l. 190. But by the use of the abstract for the concrete, it comes to mean the thing itself which falls or has fallen: as we say, "a ruin." So Plin. H. N. xxxiii. 4, "flumina ad lavandam hanc ruinam ducere." So "Ruinas transcendere conaretur." Liv. xliii. 163.

199. Ucalegon] Our next-door neighbour, whose house has already caught. See Virg. Aen. ii. 312, "Jam proximus ardet Ucalegon."

ib. tab. tertia] The third story; just below our own garret. See note on Sat. vii. 118.

203—222.] "Besides, when you are burnt out, you lose your all, and starve in the streets. The rich man, whose house has been on fire, receives so many presents that he is better off than ever."

203. Codrus] Perhaps the poet of Sat. i. 2.

ib. Procula minor] Too short for his short wife.

204. abaci] "Side-board." The word has other meanings.

ib. infra] below the abacus.

205. et—Chiron] "And a Chiron reclining under the same marble as the 'cantharus:;' i. e. under the side-board also. The figure was probably recumbent.

206. Jamque] "Well, there was too a chest which."

207. opici] A form of Osci, one of the aboriginal tribes of Italy. Here, "barbarous;" as we should say, "Vandal."

212. Arturi] He is the 'Persicus' of l. 221: childless and rich, and therefore extensively courted. See note on Sat. iv. 18—22.

212, 213.] "You have the matrons dishevelled, the great men in black, the courts closed;" i. e. it is treated as a public calamity. See on Sat. xv. 135. 'Est' and 'sunt' are understood after 'mater' and 'procures'; and 'mater' is used for 'matres,' i. e. 'matronae.'

213. diff. vad. Praetor] i. e. the courts are closed. The technical phrase (which constantly occurs in Livy) was "justitium (jus, stare) indicitur." It was the first measure in any public danger or calamity.

ib. vadimonia] The praetor did not himself try causes; he only sent them to be tried by the judices. The proceedings before the praetor consisted of two distinct parts. First the 'actio,' or right of trial, was granted; in other words, it was decided that "the action would lie." On a second day, usually the next but one, the plaintiff made his formal claim. If simply denied, the cause was at issue; and a 'judex' at once appointed. Frequently however the defendant tendered a plea ('exceptio') in reply. In this case the 'judex' was not appointed till the plea was disposed of.

On both days the personal attendance of the parties was required. The defendant's first attendance could be compelled by force; and he was not discharged until he had given a surety (vas) for his attendance on the second day. If the "vas" was satisfactory, the plaintiff accepted it, and was then said "vadari reum;"—"to let him go on surety." The defendant, on his part, was said "vadimonium facere" (or "promittere"). When he discharged the surety by his own appearance on the second day, the phrase was "vadimonium sistere."

"Differre vadimonium" (the phrase in the text) was to postpone the day for the defendant's second appearance. This might be done by arrangement, or by the courts being closed on any particular day. The effect of this latter was that all the "vadimonia" due that day "stood over" till the next sitting. The surety in these civil causes was "vas;"—"praes" was the "bail" in criminal cases.

215. Ardet (sub. "domus") adhuc, et jam] "It is still blazing, and yet already."

216. impensas] sub. "pecunias." Costs of rebuilding.

219. mediam] In the centre of the case. There is another rendering, by which "mediam" is taken for "dimidiam;"—a bust of Minerva. But this is a most rare use of the word, and it seems unnecessary to resort to it here.

221.] See note on 212; also on 129. 'Persicus;' i. e. Arturius.

223. Circensibus] i. e. the Circenses (ludi); so called from the Circus Maximus, in which they were celebrated. See note on l. 65; also on Sat. vi. 582. Their original name was Consules, from Consus, or Neptune, in whose honour they were first instituted. See Livy i. 9:—the famous rape of the Sabine women took place on this occasion. Other names for the Circenses Ludi, were Magni, and Romani. They were celebrated with great splendour, the praetor presiding: see the description Sat. x. 36—46. The entertainments began with a procession ('pompa Circensis'), in which all distinguished persons took part, and the images of the gods were carried in state; the lighter upon "stretchers" (fercula), and the more bulky upon wooden platforms on wheels (thensae). This was followed by chariot-races, and other diversions. The races excited the utmost enthusiasm; hence 'Si potes avelli' here. Cf. Sat. x. 81; xi. 53; and see also note on Sat. vii. 114.

223, 224.] For the places mentioned in these lines, see Maclean. They were all in Latium.

224. paratur] "is procured;" i. e. purchased: opp. to the 'conducis,' l. 225.

225. tenebras] "a dungeon;" i. e. a dark, gloomy house.

226. hic] At Sora, &c.

ib. brevis] Shallow; and consequently, "nec reste movendus." The water may be drawn by hand, without a rope and bucket.

228. bidentis] A pitchfork; from its two prongs.

229] It was the current belief among the Romans (although probably erroneous) that Pythagoras prohibited meat. This arose from his doctrine of the transmigration of human souls into the inferior animals (μετεμψύχωσις). For the same reason he was said to abstain from beans;—he believed his father's soul to have taken up its abode in them. Hence "faba Pythagorae cognata," Hor Sat. ii. 6. 63.

231. unius—lacertae] The lizard is universal in Italy. So that the smallest plot would be sure to have one upon it.

232. hic] In Rome.

ib. sed] "although it is true."

234. meritorius] Any thing that is hired ('mereri'). Here sub. "cubacula;"—"hired lodgings."

235. Magnis opibus] abl. of the price. 'Dormitur,' impersonal. "It costs something to sleep in Rome;" i. e. no one sleeps but those who can afford to escape the noise.

237. stantis convicia mandrae] "The oaths of the standing team,"

i. e. of their drivers. 'Stantis' is commonly referred to a street stoppage. But perhaps it only means, drawn up to load. 'Mandra' is lit. 'a stall,' from which it gets the meaning of a 'stud' or 'team.'

238. Druso] It is not known who is referred to.

ib. vitulusque marinis] Seals (lit. sea-calves), who had the reputation of being deep sleepers.

240. super ora] Over the heads; lit. faces.

ib. Liburno] The sedan-bearers at Rome were mostly of this nation. The bearer is here put for the chair he carries.

242. clausa-fenestra] The 'lectica' (see note on Sat. i. 32) had usually side-curtains, which could be closed or withdrawn at will. See Sat. i. 65 and note. For these, however, windows of the transparent 'lapis specularis' were often substituted. Cf. Sat. iv. 21.

243. Ante] Before we do on foot. We get between two waves of passengers (l. 244, 245).

246. clavus-militis] The soldier's shoe ('cálga') was armed with heavy nails. Cf. Sat. xvi. 24, 25.

249-267.] "Look at the crowd collected to receive the 'sportula.' Dangers impend over them on every side. Let a stone-waggon upset, for instance;—there will be at least one crushed to death."

249. sportula] See note on Sat. i. 95. The food distributed at the 'sportula' was cooked, and the "culina" and "ignis," mentioned l. 250, 253, were small portable stoves, which the recipients brought to keep it hot.

251. Corbulo] (Cn. Domitius.) A distinguished general under Claudius, and subsequently under Nero. In the reign of the latter, he reduced Tiridates, king of the Parthians, to submission, and thus terminated the war. Nero however commanded his execution, which Corbulo anticipated by suicide, A.D. 67. He was "corpore ingens," Tac. Ann. xiii. 8.

257. Ligustica] From the Ligurian quarries, in the Maritime Alps.

night-brawls;

261. more animae] i. e. disappears as invisibly as the breath out of it.

ib. domus] The rest of the household, who had been awaiting the return of the slave with the 'sportula.'

262, 263. unctis strigilibus] with oiling them;—used like the Greek passive participle. The 'strigil' was a sharpish iron implement, with which the skin was scraped after leaving the sweating-bath ('sudatorium'). It thus answered the purpose of a Turkish towel. The 'guttus' was a cruet of oil, for moistening the 'strigil.' It had a narrow neck, allowing the oil to flow drop by drop, from which it derived its name. 'Strigilibus' is 'strigilibus,' with the 'i' elided.

263. componit lintea] i. e. 'ponit' (lays out), 'lintea cum pleno gutto.'

264. pueros] Slaves.

ib. ille] The crushed slave.

265. ripa] Of Styx.

267. nec habet—trientem] A corpse had money placed in its mouth, to pay Charon. For 'trientem,' see Dict. Antiq. 'as.'

269. spatium] Height; lit. distance from the ground.

270, 271. quoties—cadant] i. e. broken crockery is thrown out.

275. vigiles] With the inmates awake.

277. pelves] "foot-pans."

278. qui—cecidit] "who has by the merest good fortune not killed any body."

279, 280.] See the description of Achilles mourning for Patroclus, Hom. II. xxiv. 10:—

281, 282. Ergo—fuit] "Cannot he then go to sleep, unless he goes out and fights?—Well, a fight does induce slumber in some cases."

283. hunc] The rich man with his cochineal cloak, lights, and attendants.

286. breve] Short-lived. Hence "dispenso et tempero:"—I have to manage it.

290. stari] impers. Sub. "a te."

291. furiosus] A madman. It was the technical term at Rome.

293. sectile porrum] In Sat. xiv. 133, "sectivum porrum." This was the "cut-leek," opp. to one which was allowed to grow to a head ("capitatum").

296. consistas] "stand to beg;" see l. 16 and note.

ib. proseucha] From προσευχή, which was used by the Hellenistic Jews for "an oratory." So probably in St. Luke vi. 12 (where our Saviour passed the night ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ), although see Dr. Alford's note there, and on Acts xvi. 13, οὐ ἐνομιζέτο προσευχῇ εἶναι. The argument, however, from the words ἐνομιζέτο εἶναι is hardly conclusive even as to this latter passage; while it has no application to that in St. Luke, where προσευχή stands alone.

298, 299. vadimonia—faciunt] See on l. 213. "Hold you to bail," as if you had been the aggressor.

303, 304.] "when the shops are all closed:" so that you have no chance of assistance.

306—309.] The country police is so effective, that the thieves are all driven back to Rome. For a description of the Pomptine marsh and Gallinaria sylvae, see Maclean's Juvenal ad loc. 'Pinus' stands here for 'sylva.'

309. Qua [non] fornace, &c.

ib. catenae] sub. "conficiuntur."

310. modus] Measure; i. e. quantity. Sub. "absumitur."

312. proavorum atavos] "The great-grandfathers' grandfathers of our great-grandfathers."

313. tribunis] sub. "plebis." "The republic;" the 'tribunate' being the characteristic feature of Roman freedom. The emperors were elected "tribuni plebis;" see note on Sat. ii. 163—168. But the office was then of course merely nominal.

314. uno carcere] the Carcer Mamertinus. It was built by Ancus Martius, but enlarged by Serv. Tullius, and thence called the Tullianum. It adjoined the Forum.

319. tuo] Aquinum was Juvenal's birth-place.

320, 321.] Give me an invitation there also.

320. Helvinam Cererem] i. e. her temple at Aquinum, near the spring Helvinus. The ruins of it, with those of the temple of Diana ('vestram Dianam'), are said still to exist there.

321. a Cumis] Fabricius is about to settle there (l. 2).

ib. ni pudet illas] If they will not be ashamed of such poor company.

322.] 'Caliga' was the soldier's shoe (see note on l. 248). Hence 'caligatus' (metaphor.); "equipped for fighting;" i. e. for attacking the vices of the day. The choice seems to lie between the above explanation and none. For this passage, 'caliga' should mean a stout country shoe;—but it does not.

SATIRA IV.

A CABINET COUNCIL.

"Crispinus again." Ecce iterum Crispinus! Et est mihi saepe vocandus Ad partes, monstrum nulla virtute redemptum
 A vitiiis, aeger, solaque libidine fortis.
 Quid refert igitur, quantis jumenta fatiget 5
 Porticibus? quanta nemorum vectetur in umbra?
 Jugera quot vicina foro, quas emerit aedes?
 Nemo malus felix; minime corruptor et idem
 Incestus, cum quo nuper vittata jacebat
 Sanguine adhuc vivo terram subitura sacerdos. 10
 Sed nunc de factis levioribus: et tamen alter Si fecisset idem, caderet sub iudice morum.

1. iterum] Juvenal had attacked him in Sat. i. 26.

2. ad partes] To (play) his part. Actors were said 'agere primas, secundas partes.'

3. 6. quantis—umbra] The porticoes of private houses were large enough to admit carriages. See Sat. vii. 178 and note. They were planted with trees: so Hor. Od. iii. [4] 3, 6, "nemus inter pulcra satum torti remugiat Ventis."

9. incestus] Here, one who has defiled a Vestal, the latter being consecrated.

9, 10. vittata sacerdos] i. e. a Vestal, from the fillet they wore.

10.] A Vestal who had been unchaste was buried alive in the Campus Sceleratus near the Colline gate. She was conducted thither by the Pontifex Maximus, and placed in an underground vault, with a couch, a lamp, and a small quantity of food. The earth was then filled in over her. This punishment dated from the first Tarquin;—the laws of Numa prescribed stoning only. It is not known who was the Vestal here referred to.

12. caderet sub] "be condemned by."

ib. iudices morum] Under the republic, this was the censor's office. In making out the census, he appended a remark (nota censoria) to the name of any citizen who had been guilty of private or political misconduct. The consequence of such a censure was the citizen's "ignominia," which however did not affect his private rights, although he lost some political privileges. It differed from the "infamia," which resulted from a conviction for crime, or, in some cases, from its mere perpetra-tion. The "ignominia" might be removed by subsequent censors, or remedied by amendment, while the "infamia" was perpetual.

Here, by 'judice morum' is meant Domitian, who had revived the office in his own person, and exercised it with severity; of course, sparing his own favourites. See Sueton. Domit. cap. 8; and cf. Sat. ii. 29, 30 and note. The purchase of the mullet by Crispinus was an offence against the "leges sumptuariae," and therefore properly cognizable by the censor.

13. Titio Seioque] Generally, for any good man; "A" and "B." They were the names used in discussing points mooted in legal treatises.

15. crimine] "imputation of crime."

ib. persona] "The offender."

15, 16.] See note on Sat. i. 106, "Aequantem . . . libris:" "squaring in fact the 'sestertia' to match the pounds."

18—22.] "There might be some excuse if he had bought it as a legacy-hunter's present. But no, it was for his own eating." Cf. Sat. iii. 126—130; v. 98. 137—142; vi. 38—40; x. 202; xii. 93—130; and cf. Horace's description of Ulysses turned 'captator,' Sat. ii. 5.

18. Consil. laudo artificis] "I (should) praise the designer's cleverness, if" &c.; i. e. I should recognize the artist's hand.

19. praecipuam ceram] "The first place in the rich man's will;" lit. 'first wax in the tablets.' See note on Sat. i. 63. The meaning is, got named either as sole 'haeres,' or for the principal share among several 'cohaeredes.'

20. magnae amicae] See note on Sat. iii. 129.

21. specularibus] See Sat. iii. 242, and note. 'Antro,' from the size of the litter.

22, 23. multa—Apicius] "Apicius was abstemiousness itself to what we now see." There were three famous epicures of this name, the most distinguished of whom flourished under Tiberius;—M. Gaius Apicius.

23. miser] "mean."

24. Succinct. patria papyro] "Bustling about in thy native papyrus." Coarse tunics were made of this material. 'Succinctus' comes to mean 'active' or 'bustling,' from the belt ('cinctus' or 'cinctura') with which the tunic was fastened up round the waist when the wearer was in motion, and which was removed at other times. Cf. Sat. viii. 162. For the same reason, 'discinctus' means 'lazy.'

ib. patria] Because Crispinus came from Egypt. See Sat. i. 28.

A fisherman's gift.

26, 27.] "You might buy a large estate in the provinces at that price, or nearer home a still larger one." Landed investments in the provinces were in fashion, which lowered the price of even good land in Italy. 'Appulia' is used with particular force, as it was the best grazing-land in Italy. See Sat. ix. 55 and note.

29. endoperatorem] Lengthened form of 'imperator.' 'Endo' or 'indu' stood for 'in' in the old Latin.

31. Palati] The Palatine hill: originally Pallanteum, and shortened into Palatium. Under Augustus, it became the imperial residence, and was entirely occupied by buildings of the Court, with a temple of Apollo, and public library contiguous. See Hor. Ep. i. 3. 17, "Scripta Palatinus quaecunque accepit Apollo." In the Latinity of the empire it is therefore equivalent to our "palace."

32. princeps Equitum] Probably no office is designated; the term merely means "a leading man amongst."

33. municipes-siluros] "the compatriot shade of his Pharian stock-in-trade." Crispinus was an Egyptian; see l. 24 and note; hence the shade are called his 'municipes' or fellow-burghers. He had probably hawked them dried about the villages. 'Pharia' means Egypt generally, from the well-known Pharos.

34, 35. licet et considerare-cantandum] "And you may as well be seated about it, for it is grave earnest—no mere trick of poetry."

35. puellae] transl. "maids."

37, 38.] Vespasian, the first of the Flavia gens who became emperor, was succeeded by his sons Titus and (subsequently) Domitian. With the latter the Flavian dynasty terminated at this period, although it was revived in the Constantines.

38. calvo Neroni] "Nero the bald;" as if it were an epithet by which one monarch was distinguished from a predecessor of the same name. The meaning of course is that Domitian was Nero over again in tyranny. From a passage in Ausonius, the nickname would seem to have been given by others besides Juvenal. Domitian was extremely sensitive on the score of his baldness.

ib. serviret] Domitian was the first emperor who assumed the title of "Dominus."

40. Dorica] Ancon is a sea-port in Picenum, on the Adriatic; the modern Ancona. It was colonized by Syracusan exiles in the reign of Dionysius, B.C. 380. Syracuse itself was colonized from Corinth; and Corinth was conquered by the Dorians on the return of the Heracleidae to Peloponnesus. Ancon was therefore of Doric extraction, and is hence called 'Dorica' here.

41. sinus] The folds of the net.

43. Pontis] sub. "Euxini." The turbots which thus descended from the sea of Azoff (Palus Maeotis) into the Euxine formed a considerable item of traffic at Byzantium. See Tac. Ann. xii. 63.

46. Pontifici summo] i. e. Maximo. This was one of the titles assumed by the emperors. The Pontifex Maximus was the head of the college of five pontifices appointed by Numa, but eventually (under Sulla) increased to fifteen. They were a self-elected body ('cooptati'). After the 'lex Domitia' however (B.C. 104) the election was practically transferred to the comitia of the tribes, the college receiving what we should call a "congé d'élire" to choose their nominees. The pontifices had the general control of religion, thus differing from the priests attached to particular temples, whose functions were merely ministerial. The duties of the college were detailed in the 'libri pontificales' of Numa. They consisted chiefly in regulations of ritual, and in deciding on the admission or exclusion of new objects of worship. The pontifices also acted as judges in causes affecting religion.

The Pontifex Maximus was always chosen from the highest families, and the office was compatible with civil and military appointments. Thus the Pontifex Maximus was frequently consul; see Livy xxviii. 38. He was not, however, until the later period of the republic, allowed to leave Italy.

ib. proponere] sub. "venalem." "Expose for sale."

48. protenus] "In one hour."

48, 49.] "There would be officials all over the place, hunting up the sea-weed, and litigating with the fisherman."

53. Si] "In fact if."

ib. Palfurio, Armillato] Informers.

55. Res fisci] Under the empire, the public revenue was distributed in two classes. That administered by the emperors was called 'fiscus' (lit. a basket). That which remained under the senate's control kept its old name of 'aerarium.'

55. ubicumque natus] Properly, it was only in certain waters that fish could be claimed by the crown. These spies however would have claimed the turbot, from its excellence, wherever taken. This was a wider ground than that of the 'inquisitores,' l. 49. The latter would only allege that the fish had escaped from the imperial preserves.

56. pereat] "be seized."

57. sperantibus] Merely "anticipating." It has been rendered, "hoping that these tertian fevers would turn into quartan" (come every four days instead of three), which happens late in the autumn. But this is far-fetched.

59. hic] The fisherman.

60, 61.] On the destruction of Alba by Tullus Hostilius (see Livy i. 29), the temples were spared, and continued till the time of the empire. Domitian had a palace there, formerly the property of Cn. Pompeius.

61. Vestam—minorem] As compared with her worship at Rome; "less illustrious." The worship of Vesta existed at Alba before the foundation of Rome. See Livy i. 20;—Silvia, the mother of Romulus, was a Vestal. Numa did not supersede the worship of Vesta at Alba, although he fixed its principal site at Rome.

65. Atridem] The emperor.

66. genialis agatur] Be "devoted to the genius;" i. e. kept as a holiday. So Hor. Od. iii. 17. 14, "cras genium mero Curabis." The 'genius' was a kind of guardian angel, attached to each person at birth, and having an existence coincident with and causative of his own. Hence, the 'genius' was worshipped on the birthday and other festive occasions, as the source of life and its enjoyments. In effect, this was the idea of individual life made objective, and invested with a distinct being;—a second self.

67. laxare] "distend."

ib. saginis] With delicacies. Lit. 'saginae' are a cattle-feed for fattening animals.

69, 70. Et tamen—cristae] "Gross as this flattery was, the emperor's comb began to rise under it."

71. potestas] "office" used for "official." Cf. Sat. x. 100. Here, of course, it means the emperor.

75. Liburno] "slave." Cf. Sat. iii. 240.

76. sedit] sub. "princeps."

77. Pegasus] An eminent jurist made 'praefectus urbi' by Domitian. The 'praefectus urbi' was the 'custos urbis' of the regal period and early republic;—the king's (and afterwards the consul's) substitute, for the discharge of their functions, within the city, when absent. When the 'praetor urbanus' (third consul) was instituted, his office, which was identical with that of the 'custos urbis', absorbed the latter. Its shadow, however, was still retained under the title of 'praefectus urbi', and for the purpose only of celebrating the 'Feriae Latinae.' Under the empire, the 'praefectus urbi' again recovered the functions of the ancient 'custos', the office of 'praetor urbanus' being absorbed into it in turn.

77, 78.] "Recently appointed as bailiff to the scared city. For were the 'praefecti' (urbi) anything else then than bailiffs of the emperor ?" 'Adtonitae,' "stupor-struck;" i.e. by Domitian's tyranny. Unless it means, "surprised at so good an appointment."

78—81.] Good as Pegasus was, and bad as the times were, he was fain to acquiesce in the disarming of Justice; i.e. in the submission of law and constitutional right to the ruler's will. The statue of Justice had always a sword in one hand.

81. Crispi] Crispus Vibius, a distinguished orator of this period.

82, 83.] "Whose character was gentle like his oratory." 'Mite,' sub. "cujus erat."

87, 88. pluvius—vere] The most trivial topics.

93. illa—in aula] Even in that court.

94. Acilius] M. Acilius Glabrio. His son of the same name (the 'juvene' of l. 95) was put to death by Domitian. He had been consul with Trajan, A.D. 91.

98. fraterculus—gigantis] (γγγ εροῦς) i. e. 'terrae filius'; a cant phrase of the period for a "nobody." See Pers. Sat. vi. 57. 59, "progenies terrae . . . terrae est jam filius;" also Cic. Att. i. 13, "terrae filio nescio cui."

99—101.] The younger Glabrio had done this, that Domitian might not fear his taking any part in politics. 'Albana arena': at the emperor's private amphitheatre, in his Alban palace. See note on l. 60, 61.

100. Numidas] It is said that there are no bears in Africa. Juvenal, however, follows Virgil (Aen. v. 37).

101—103.] The well-known story of Brutus's disguise under Tarquin, Livy i. 56.

103. barbato—regi] "an old-world monarch." Lit. "bearded," shaving having been first introduced at Rome by Ticius Maena, B.C. 300.

104. melior] "happier." ib. quamvis ignob.] "though protected by his obscurity."

105. Rubrius] Gallus Rubrius. He is said to have seduced Domitian's niece, Julia; see note on Sat. ii. 31. Hence the 'offensae veteris.'

106.] "And yet more unblushing in his censure of others than even our imperial satirist of his own vices." Nero is meant. He had published a satire on Quintianus for effeminacies of which the emperor was himself equally guilty.

107. Montani] Curtius Montanus. He is the Curtius of Sat. xi. 34, "an Curtius et Matho, buccae," and therefore a mouthing orator like Matho. Under Nero and the subsequent reigns he had made some stand for freedom. He seems now to have become subservient enough.

108. matutino] The use of unguents in the forenoon was marked dissipation.

109. duo funera] Perfumes were thrown on the funeral pile, as soon as the fire had caught.

109, 110. Pompeius] Probably Pomp. Rufus, a noted informer of the day.

112. Fuscus] i. e. Cornelius Fuscus. He had been an active officer under Vespasian, but subsequently retired into private life. It would seem however, from l. 112, that he still retained his military tastes. In the Dacian war he was despatched by Domitian against Decebalus, but was surprised by the latter, his army routed, and himself slain. Hence "vulturibus Dacis," l. 111.

113. Veiento] See note on Sat. iii. 185.

ib. Catullo] Another noted informer; hence 'mortifero.'

114. numquam visae] He was blind.

116. dirusque a ponte satelles] "a hateful, cringing satellite." The idea 'a ponte' is amplified in the two following lines. Mendicants took their stand on bridges (see Sat. v. 8), or frequented roads, such as that leading to Aricia.

118. devexae] Descending the hill. Aricia lay in a deep valley, over which the 'Via Appia' was carried on a causeway; but the hill ('clivus Aricinus') was still a steep one.

ib. jactaret basia] i. e. kissing his hand to the travellers. See note on Sat. iii. 106.

121. laudabat] "would praise."

ib. Cilicis] Some famous gladiator from that country.

122.] The 'pegma' was a platform on which the actors were raised and lowered by concealed machinery.

ib. velaria] For 'velum';—a cotton awning spread over the theatre as a protection against the sun. Cf. Lucr. iv. 73, "magneis intenta theatris Per malos volgata trabesque tremmentia fluctant."

123. Non cedit] Does not yield to Catullus in flattery.

ib. fanaticus] Note on Sat. ii. 112.

127. Arviragus] A British king, who is inferred from this passage to have been then in arms against Rome. There is no other mention of the fact.

128. sudes] lit. stakes sharpened at the end for fighting. Here, the prickly fins of the fish.

129. Fabricio] i. e. Veiento.

130. Quidnam—conciditur] The emperor speaks. ‘Quidnam censes’ is a technical phrase. The senate, as a whole, was said ‘censere.’ Its members were asked individually, ‘Quid censes?’ ‘Conciditur:’ “is it to be cut up?”

132. colligat] Comprise.

133. Prometheus] i. e. a potter. Prometheus made men of clay. See Sat. xiv. 35; and Hor. Od. i. 16. 13, 14, “Prometheus, addere principi Lino coactus particulam undique desectam.”

134. Argillam atque rotam] To make the dish.

135. aliam famem] “Second appetite.” The Romans produced this after a full meal by powerful stimulants, or more frequently by vomiting.

140. tempestate] For ‘tempore.’

140, 141. Circeis—Lucrinum—saxum] See Sat. viii. 86, and note.

141. Rutupino] From Rutupiae;—Richborough, near Sandwich, on the Kentish coast.

147.] The Sygambri, a people on the Rhine, had been subdued by Augustus. Domitian himself had celebrated a triumph over the Catti, although with little to show for it. The Catti were a German nation, and the passage shows the uneasiness already felt with regard to these northern tribes.

149. praecipiti—penna] Probably merely “on headlong wing,” as a metaphor for "swiftly." It has been thought to refer to carrier-pigeons; while the Scholiast states that letters with bad news had a feather tied to them. But these are mere surmises. A victory was announced by bay-leaves being tied in the letter ('laureatae literae').

153. periit] Domitian was murdered by conspirators, A.D. 96.

ib. cerdonibus] The vulgar. Lit. the cobblers.

154. Lamiarum] The aristocracy. "Aeli vetusto nobilis ab Lamo," Hor. Od. iii. 17. 1. But Domitian had murdered an Aelius Lamia, whom he had previously deprived of his wife. Suet. Dom. i.

2. quadra] "trencher."

3, 4.] Sarmentus was the parasite of Augustus, Galba of Tiberius. The former is perhaps the Sarmentus ridiculed by Horace, Sat. i. 5. 52 seqq.

8, 9.] "Can you not beg?"

8. crepido—pons] See note on iv. 116. 'Crepido' is the raised footway on the bridge or suburban road, on which beggars posted themselves.

ib. tegetis] The mendicant's sleeping-mat.

9. dimidia brevior] "though reduced to (lit. by) half." Cf. Sat. viii. 4.

ib. Tantine—coenae] "Is the robbery of a supper so dear-priced?" Lit., it would be "injuria amissae coenae;" — the wrong done your stomach in depriving it of a supper. Cf. Virg. Aen. iii. 256, "caedique injuria nostrae." The rendering, "Do you price so high the supper where you meet with so much insult?" seems feeble.

10. possit] scil. "fames." "Your hunger."

ib. illic] On the beggar's mat.

12, 13.] "Say now, you are asked to dine; have at last got some substantial equivalent for years of attendance."

14. amicitiae magnae] "your great man's acquaintance."

ib. imputat] "keeps an account of it."

17. tertia—lecto] “lest the third cushion on a spare couch should be unemployed;” i. e. just to fill up a vacant place. This refers to the arrangements of the ‘triclinium.’ The couches (‘lecti’) formed three sides of a parallelogram round the table, while the bottom was left open to allow of the slaves placing the dinner. Each couch held three, who reclined on their left side, leaning on a cushion placed under the elbow;—the “culcita” here. The right hand was thus left free for eating, for which they leant forward, returning to the left elbow when satisfied.

The guests were arranged in numerical order, beginning with the right-hand couch (as you stood at the bottom or open side), the guest nearest the bottom being No. 1, the next No. 2, and the next No. 3, which completed the ‘summus (first) lectus.’ The ‘medius lectus’ (that at the top) was similarly arranged, and so on to No. 9, who lay nearest to the bottom on the left-hand couch, ‘imus lectus.’ As the guests all lay in the same direction, the head of No. 2 (who was therefore said ‘jacere infra’) rested nearly in the bosom of No. 1, who was said ‘jacere supra;’ that of No. 3 in No. 2, and so on. The ‘medius lectus’ was the most honourable of the three, and the centre place the most honourable in each couch. See the description of Nasidienus’ dinner, Hor. Sat. ii. 8. 20—23.

19—23.] “Trebius (the parasite) surely has now what he has been dancing attendance for.”

20. lig. dimittere] Leave his shoe-strings untied from haste.

21. peregerit orbem] “made their round.” For ‘salutatrix,’ see note on Sat. iii. 129.

22, 23.] “At daybreak, or even in the depth of night.” Lit. “when the stars are paling, or while the chill wain of Bootes is still lazily wheeling round.”

24. succida] Newly shorn. Lit. ‘succidus’ is “having the juice in it,” like fresh-gathered fruit. Here it is applied by metaphor to recently shorn wool, out of which the dirt has not been washed.

24, 25. quod—pati] It appears from Pliny, that wool saturated with wine or other fluids, was used in external applications. The rubbing of the sheep themselves with wine-lees after shearing cannot possibly be meant, as has been supposed.

ib. nolit—pati] “would refuse to absorb.”

25. Corybanta] “A maniac;”—the wine is so fiery. The Corybantes were the priests of Cybele, whose worship was celebrated with wild 29. Pugna—commissa] "battle joined with." Cf. Sat. i. 163.

ib. Saguntina] A cheap but useful pottery was manufactured at Saguntum in Spain.

30. diffusum] sub. "vinum." "Bottled." Lit. poured from the cask into the amphora. Cf. Hor. Ep. i. 5. 4, "Vina bibes iterum Tauro diffusa."

ib. capillato consule] "years ago." Lit. 'when a Consul still wore his hair long.' This was the case till B.C. 300, when the contrary practice was introduced; — simultaneously with that of shaving. See note on Sat. iv. 103.

31.] Imitation of Hor. Od. iii. 14. 18, "cadum Marsi memorem duelli." The "bellum sociale" broke out B.C. 90, and was terminated in the following year by Pompeius Strabo. It was a revolt of the allied states ("socii") of Italy, with the exception only of the Latins, Tuscans, and Umbrians. The revolt was provoked by the jealousy of the "socii" at their continued exclusion, as a body, from the Roman citizenship. On the termination of the war, this point was judiciously conceded; see note on Sat. iii. 34. The Italian states having thus become an integral part of the commonwealth, the term "socii" was now transferred to allied states out of Italy.

It should be observed that the complete term for the Italian allied states had been "socii Latini," (or 'nomen Latinum,') i. e. "socii et Latini;" the inhabitants of Latium having, from their early connexion with Rome, the privilege of being thus distinguished from the "socii" of the rest of Italy. See Sat. viii. 256, "auxiliis (i. e. 'sociis') atque omni pube Latina."

32. cyathum] A Roman measure; — $\frac{1}{16}$ of a pint ("sextarius").

34. Setinis] From Setia in the Pomptine marshes. Under the empire, its wines to some extent superseded those of Campania.

36, 37.] "Wine fit only for a festival." The particular festival instanced is remarkable as showing Juvenal's attachment to republican institutions. It is one which he supposes Thræsea and Helvidius to have kept on the birthdays of the "liberators of their country;" — the Bruti (the two "patriots" of that name), and Cassius. Thræsea (P. Thræsea Poetus), and Helvidius (Priscus Helvidius, the son-in-law of Thræsea), were both famous for the independence they professed under the empire. The former was murdered by Nero A.D. 66. The latter, after being banished by Nero, and recalled by Galba, was again banished by Vespasian (whom he refused to recognize as emperor) and finally executed by his order.

36. solebant] sub. "bibere."

37—39. Ipse—Virro] Your entertainer.

37, 38. capaces Heliadum crustas] "The ample embossments of the Heliades;" i. e. of amber. It means, of course, the goblets to which the embossed work ("crustae") was attached. See note on Sat. i. 76. The Heliades were Phaeton's sisters, whose tears were turned to amber.

38. inaequales] "studded."

42.] Sarcastically. "Perhaps though we must excuse him;—the jasper on that cup is celebrated."

43—45.] The jewels on plate were probably moveable, like the 'crustae,' and, in Virro's case, were perhaps set either for wearing on the finger, or affixing to a goblet when at table. Hence, "ad pocula transfert a digitis." By the "quas solebat" it is not meant that Aeneas (see next note) wore these identical gems. What he put on his scabbard, Virro, and those like him, ("ut multi,") displayed alternately on their hands and drinking-cups.

45. praelatus] i. e. by Dido. See Virg. Aen. iv. 36, 37, "despectus Iarbas, Ductoresque alii." The "ju-venis" is of course Aeneas.

46. Beneventani sutoris] Vatinius, a favourite and spy of Nero, formerly a cobbler of Beneventum. Drinking-cups with nozzles were introduced by him, and called "Vatinius" in consequence. See Mart. Ep. xiv. 96, "sutoris calicem monumenta Vatini Accipe;" also note on l. 48 of this Sat.

48. quassatum] "cracked."

ib. rupto—vitro] The exchange of broken glass for sulphur is mentioned in Martial, Ep. i. 41. 4, 5, "Qui pallentia sulphurata fractis Permutant vitreis." Cf. Ep. x. 3. 3, 4, "Quae sulphurato nolit emta ramento Vatiniorem proxeneta fractorum."

50. decocta] sub. "aqua." Water boiled, and afterwards cooled with snow.

51.] "Non" is construed with "eadem," and "modo" with "querebar."

52. cursor] A lackey, who ran before carriages; i. e. a mere out-door servant, had in to wait. This made the indignity the greater.

55.] See note on Sat. i. 171. These tombs must have afforded great facilities for highway robbery.

57. Tulli pugnacis] See Virg. Aen. vi. 814, 815, "Otia qui rumpet patriae, residues movebit Tullus in arma viros."

ib. census] "property." The word first means the register of persons and property made by the censor every five years, and by which the 'ordo' of each individual was ascertained. See note on Sat. viii. 2. It then comes to mean the qualification itself as stated in the register; and thus, at last, merely "property."

59. frivola] "chattels."

59—63.] "So mind, if thirsty, you are to summon only your black Ganymede" (the "cursor" of l. 52, 53);—"the page won't serve you. Well; there is some excuse for him;—he is young, and good-looking.

But, in reality, even the blackamoor ('ille,' l. 62) does not come to you once in ten times."

61. miscere] sub. "pocula:—" "compound the wine and water for." The continental practice is familiar.

63. calidae—gelidae] sub. "aquae."
 68. Vix fractum] So stale that it has to be broken in pieces, not cut;—and even this is done with some difficulty.

69. genuinum] sub. "dentem."
 "Your jaw-tooth."

72, 73.] "Keep your distance from the fancy-bread. Though, in fact, should you attempt a theft, you will be soon made to drop it." 'Artoptæ' was a kind of roll-tin for baking light bread. It is here used for the bread itself.

74, 75.] The butler speaks: 76—

77. adversum] "against collar."

81. squilla] Usually a shrimp ; but here probably a large kind of lobster. "Cammarus" (84) was a small cheap kind.

84. constrictus dimidio ovo] "garnished with (lit. confined by) a halved egg." Cf. viii. 4 ; xiii. 95 ; xiv. 132.

85. feralis] on account of the eggs. On the ninth day after a funeral a sacrifice (hence called 'novendiale') was offered, followed by a feast ('silicernium'). It is supposed (although on slight authority) that eggs formed part of one or both of these.

86. Venafrano] sub. "oleo."

87, 88. olebit laternam] "smell of the lamp;" i. e. "be served with train-oil."

88. illud] scil. "oleum."

88, 89.] "with which some Numidian reed canoe has been freighted."

"Micipsarum," for sing. "Micipsa," king of Numidia. He was the son of Masinissa, and a steady ally of the Romans. He assisted them with an auxiliary force in Spain B.C. 142, and again in the war against Numantia.

89. subvexit] Strictly "subverhere" is to convey up a stream. But it is also used for water-carriage generally.

90. cum Bocch. nem. lav.] Because he used this train-oil in the bath, instead of unguents. It is unknown who Bocchar was.

91.] The oil was rubbed on the body, and its smell kept snakes at a distance. But the line is suspected.

93. Tauromen.] Sicilian. See Maclean's Juvenal ad loc. "Since our sea ('mare Tyrrhenum') is used up, and has now quite failed."

104. Tiberinus] sub. "lupus." "Tiber-pike." Horace (Sat. ii. 2. 31) gives the complete phrase.

106. Suburae] See note on Sat. iii. 5.

107. Ipsi] the host.

108—113.] "We do not expect the presents which the great formerly sent. We only ask you, when you do give an invitation, to sup with us on even terms (lit. citizenly);—not as if we were slaves or aliens."

109. Seneca] See note on Sat. x. 16.

ib. Piso—Cotta] Probably C. Calpurnius Piso and L. Aurelius Cotta. The latter was praetor B. C. 70, and a friend of Cicero. Piso was the leader of the unsuccessful conspiracy against Nero, A.D. 65. On its detection he opened his own veins, and bled to death. But perhaps the names are used at random for any of the illustrious families.

110, 111.] "For formerly the renown of munificence was deemed greater than birth or office."

110. titulis] The inscriptions on the 'imagines' of ancestors. Those who had filled a curule magistracy, were entitled to have a figure of themselves modelled in wax and painted. This was termed the 'jus imaginum'; and the possession of these 'imagines' by their families distinguished the 'nobiles' from the 'novi homines.' See Sat. vi. 162, 163; viii. 1—5, and notes; also note on Sat. i. 100. The curule magistracies were the offices of dictator, consul, praetor, censor, and curule aedile. They were so called, because those who served them had the right of sitting on the 'sella curulis,' the ancient symbol of royalty.

ib. fascibus] The well-known insignia of office of the consuls, praetors, and dictators; also of the quaestors when in the provinces. They consisted of twelve bundles of rods, each carried by a lictor. Out of Rome, the 'fasces' had an axe ('securis') projecting from the centre, and were carried before both consuls. In the city, the axes were removed, and only one consul had the lictors and fasces, the other being pre-

115. Altilis] sub. "gallina." A fatted hen.

116. raduntur] "are peeled." See Sat. xiv. 7, and note there.

116, 117.] Mushrooms require moisture.

120. Structorem] The arranger of the dishes on table. The term also seems, from l. 121—124, to include the "carptor," or carver, as in Sat. xi. 136—141. In Sat. ix. 110, the latter (and correct) name is used.

121. χειροπομῶντρα] Construe as participle.

122. dictata] subst. plur.: "lessons."

125—127.] "As to conversing, you had best not attempt it."

125. ictus—Cacus] The story is well known from Virg. Aen. viii. 190 seqq. For 'duceris planta,' see l. 264, 265, "pedibusque informe cadaver Protrahitur."

127. tamquam habeas tria nomina] i. e. "as if you were of noble descent." A Roman who was not well-born had only two names, his own and that of his family;—our Christian and surname, in fact. Persons of good birth had a third name, indicating the 'gens,' or ancient house to which the family belonged. This additional name ended usually in 'ius,' and was, practically, a title of nobility.

Where there were three names, they were distinguished respectively as the 'praenomen,' 'nomen,' and 'cognomen.' The 'praenomen' stood first, and indicated the individual; as 'Marcus.' The 'nomen,' or title of the 'gens,' stood second; as 'Tullius.' The 'cognomen,' or surname, was placed last; as 'Cicero.'

In addition to these three names, there was occasionally a fourth, derived from some personal merit or other quality. It was called the 'agnomen,' and followed the 'cognomen'; as 'Africanus.' Occasionally, these 'agnomina' descended like the 'cognomen'; thus, both sons of Scipio were 'Africani.'

127—129.] "When does Virro ever taste the cup, and hand it to you?" This was an usual compliment to a guest, both at Greek and Roman entertainments. 'Sumitque—pocula:' "or take it from you in turn?" 'Propinare' is Latinized from πρωτῖναι.

130. regi] The host (Virro). So Sat. i. 136.

131. pertusa] "frayed."

132. Quadringenta] See note on Sat. i. 106. It was the 'equestris census': see note on Sat. iii. 155.

135, 136.] "Then it would be, Hand to Trebius, &c."

137—145.] "Find a fortune, and you become his brother, or rather your money does. But if you would actually reverse your present position, and become a great man ('domino,' l. 147), and your great man's master, have no children. As it is, with no inheritance for him to court, you may have them by dozens."

138, 139.] Parody on the words of Dido, Virg. Aen. iv. 328, "Si quis mihi parvulus aula Luderet Aeneas."

141. Mycale] Your wife.

142. ipse] referring to patris, i. e.

you yourself. It is strange that this should have been overlooked. The change from the second to the third person is no difficulty, but adds to the 'prosopopoeia' of the picture.

143. gaudebit nido] "brood." Be better pleased the more there are of them.

143, 144.] Have treats for each. "Thoraca," "bib." "Minimas (i. e. 'parvas') nuces," "nuts:" ('nux,' by itself, is a walnut.) "Assem rogatum." "The begged halfpenny."

145.] "As often as the sycophant child comes to the table."

146. ancipites] questionable.

146, 147.] The 'boletus' was a mushroom of superior quality. Agrippina killed the Emperor Claudius with one, into which Locusta had previously infused the deadly poison of the rubeta. See Sat. i. 71; vi. 659.

150. pascaris] You might dine after their scent alone.

151. Phaeacum] The well-known gardens of Alcinoüs. See Hom. Od. vii. 114—119.

152. sororibus Afris] The Hesperides, who kept the golden apples given to Juno on her marriage. The dragon Ladon assisted them.

153—155.] "A scab of an apple which a showman's monkey might gnaw on the boulevard." Lit. "which he gnaws on the 'agger,' who is protected by targe and helm, and in terror of the lash, learns to throw his javelin from a hairy she-goat." The 'agger' was probably that of Servius Tullius. It had long ceased to be of use as a fortification, and was the favourite resort of the poorer classes;—a kind of low "boulevard." Besides the monkey in this passage, Juvenal mentions the plebeian fortune-tellers (Sat. vi. 588), and the women who wove for hire (Sat. viii. 43). There is another version, by which ll. 154, 155, mean "a recruit," 'capella' being taken as a cant term for a drill-master. The apple then will be such as the recruit gnaws, not the monkey. The chief support of this is the Scholiast's statement that the Praetorian guard was quartered near this "agger." This is probably correct enough. But the 'capella,' for a drill-master, reads very like an invention, especially if "hirsuta" must be rendered "old." Besides, the gnawing an apple is much less speciul to a recruit than to a monkey.

156—160.] "Perhaps now in all this you think Virro is economizing. Nothing of the kind: he does it expressly to annoy you."

157. comoedia, mimus] See on Sat. i. 3.

160. presso—molari] "to gnash your teeth." Lit. "to grate with close-set grinder."

163. nudus] destitute.

ib. illum] Virro.

164, 165.] "If he is noble, or even free-born." The 'bulla' was worn by free-born children under the age of puberty, and thus coincidently with the 'praetexta'; see note on Sat. i. 78. It was a round boss, suspended from the neck, and usually of gold, although the children of poor freemen substituted leather; see l. 165. Its origin, like that of other

166—169.] "The fact is, you think the good dinner must come at last:—which it never does."

168. minor] half eaten.

169. stricto] ready for action;—like a drawn sword.

171. vertice raso] Like a slave. Slaves, on manumission, had the head shaved, and a felt hat ('pileus') given them. See Pers. Sat. v. 82, "Haec mera libertas, hanc nobis pilea donant." Plaut. Amphit. i. l. 306, "Ut ego hodie raso capite calvus capiam pileum."

1. Sat. rege] In the golden age. Virg. Aen. viii. 324, "Aurea quae perhibent, illo sub rege fuerunt saecula" (scil. 'Saturno').

7. Cynthia] Mistress of Propertius.

20. Hac] scil. "pudicitia."

20—24.] "So early dates female dishonour. Other crimes arose in the iron age;—this only in the silver."

22.] The bridal bed was usually placed in the 'atrium'; see note on Sat. i. 12. As the source of existence, it was sacred to the "Genius" (see note on Sat. iv. 66), and was called "lectus genialis." Cf. Hor. Ep. i. l. 87, "lectus genialis in aula est." See also Sat. x. 334.

25. Conventum] This seems to be much what we call "an engagement;"—the consent of the parties themselves previous to any formal contract.

ib. pactum] The preliminary settlement of the terms of the contract.

ib. sponsalia] The marriage contract itself. See note on Sat. ii. 119.

26, 27. a tonsore—pectoris] Have your hair dressed by some master-hand in the art. Or perhaps it means, "by the proprietor himself;" not the assistant.

27. digito] of your bride. It has been inferred from this passage that the giving a ring to the bride formed part of the marriage contract.

28. eras] "used to be."

30—32.] "When you might hang yourself, or jump out of window or off a bridge."

31. caligantes] 'dizzy'; i. e. making those who looked from it dizzy, from its height.

32. Aemilius pons] Now Ponte Rialto. It was commenced B.C. 179, in the censorship of M. Aemilius Lepidus.

33. Ursidio] Posthumus.

ib. lex Julia] i. e. the "lex Julia et Papia Poppaea," for regulating marriages. To discourage celibacy, it precluded a bachelor from taking any 'haereditas' or legacy, unless he married within 100 days from the testator's death.

ib. tollere] A new-born child was lifted from the ground by its father, which precluded him from afterwards questioning its legitimacy. The term is therefore equivalent to 'habere'—"he looks forward to having a child of his own."

40. jubis] for 'barbis.' The mullet has a beard, and is hence called 'barbatulus.' Cic. Par. v. 2.

44.] "Whom the chest of the imperilled Latinus has so often concealed:" i. e. whose hair-breadth escapes have been the subject of so many farces. Latinus had often represented Ursidius on the stage as hiding in a chest from the husband's chastisement. For Latinus, see note on Sat. i. 36.

47. Delicias hominis] Ridiculous man! Lit. the trifling (i. e. folly) of the man. 'Deliciae' gets this meaning from its sense of a beloved object; hence, the caresses bestowed on one.

ib. Tarp. lim.] The temple of Jupiter Capitolinus.

48. auratam] with the horns gilt. Virg. Aen. ix. 627, "aurata fronte juvencum."

ib. Junoni] See Virg. Aen. iv. 59, "Junoni ante omnes, cui vincula jugalia curae."

50.] "To touch the chaplets of Ceres," i. e. to join in her festival. On fête-days the images of the gods were crowned with garlands. See Virg. Aen. ii. 168, "Virgineas ausi, Divae contingere vittas." At the Greek festival of Ceres (Thesmophoria) strict purity was required; and the usage seems to have been retained in the Roman "Cerealia." See Dion. Hal. i. 83, ἰδρύσαντο δὲ καὶ Δήμητρος ἑρὸν, καὶ τὰς θυσίας αὐτῇ διὰ γυναικῶν τε καὶ νηφελίου ἔθυσαν.

51, 52. Necte-corymbos] The wedding festivities took place at the bridegroom's house, to which the bride was escorted in the evening. The doorway was festooned with flowers and clusters of ivy-berries (corymbi).

53. Iberinae] his intended wife.

55—58.] "In the country indeed you do find a reputation here and there. Let its possessor (when married) live up to it, even in the quietest of towns, and I will grant it was merited."

56, 57. Gabiis-Fidenis] These towns were so deserted that they had passed into a proverb. See Sat.

x. 109; and cf. Hor. Epist. i. 11. 7, "Gabijs desertior atque Fidenis vicus."

60. porticibus] The public porticoes round the Forum, Campus Martius, and elsewhere, which were resorted to both for business and recreation. Or the porticoes of the 'thermae' may be meant. See note on Sat. vii. 233.

61. Cuneis] The "blocks," or compartments of seats at the theatre. They were called 'cunei,' because the benches were arranged in semicircular tiers rising one above the other; see note on Sat. iii. 154. The circumference was thus greater in the top tiers than at the bottom; and the rows of stairs which gave access to them divided the whole into compartments of the shape of a blunt wedge.

61—81.] "Will you find a blameless character among the spectators at the theatre?—Why, they act farces themselves at home (67—70); or, worse still, admit the comedians to their favours."

67. aulaea rec. cessant] The dramatic performances were exhibited only at certain festivals; see line 69, also Sat. iii. 174. When they were over, the stage machinery was put away ('recondita'), including of course the 'aulaea,' or curtain. The latter was technically called "siparium." It differed from our stage-curtain in being lowered by machinery under the floor, instead of lifted, at the commencement of the piece. See Hor. Ep. ii. 1. 189, "Quatuor, aut plures, aulaea premuntur in horas." When the piece was over, the 'siparium' was raised;—where our curtain drops.

ib. cessant] Rest.

68. fora] The law-courts.

69.] "And there is the long break between the 'Plebei ludi' and the 'Megalesia' (when the theatres will open again)." The 'Plebei ludi' were in November, the 'Megalesia' in April. The former commemorated the termination of the dispute between the plebs and patricians, after the first secession of the former to the Mons Sacer. The Megalesia were the festival of Cybele, the μαγδλη μύθρη: see notes on Sat. iii. 137, and Sat. xi. 191.

69, 70. tristes—Acci] "They are dull, and have private theatricals."

70. persona] "mask."

ib. thyrsus] The pole carried by the Bacchanals;—here, of course, the dramatic thyrsus, carried by the dancers, who personated them. Its upper part terminated in a fir-cone, or a cone-shaped bunch of ivy and acanthus leaves.

ib. subligar Acci] The drawers of Accius. He was a performer of the day, like Urbicus, Echion, and the other names in this passage.

71. exodio—Atell.] See note on Sat. iii. 175.

71, 72. ris. movet—gestibus Auto-

72—75.] "As he (Urbicus) only performs in low comedy, Aelia, poor as she is, can afford to fall in love with him. It is only an Hispulla (some wealthy lady) who can aspire to a tragedian." The actors were not only made love to, but paid for it.

76. de qua] "by whom."

77. fiat pater] transl. "may become a father:" i.e. merely that he may.

78—81.] "Go, celebrate your nuptials with all splendour;—and find, by and by, some gladiator's child in your wife's cradle."

78. pulpita] Stages erected for the entertainments given in honour of the marriage.

79.] See note on l. 51, 52.

80. conopeo] Here, a child's cradle with a head;—the present "bercelonette." "Testudineo," tortoise-shell.

ib. Lentule] Used for any one of noble birth. "Nobilis" is of course ironical.

81. mirmillonem] The "mirmillo" was the gladiator usually pitted with the 'retarius;' see Sat. viii. 200. The name arose from the figure of a fish, μορμύροσ, which they are said to have worn on their helmets.

ib. exprimat] "reproduce in feature."

82. Senatori] The Fabricius Veiento of Sat. iii. 185, iv. 113 seqq. See l. 113 of this Satire.

ib. ludium] i.e. Sergius, l. 105. The original meaning of 'ludius' is an actor of pantomime. It would seem however from this passage, compared with ll. 110—114, and l. 266, that the term had now come to comprise gladiators. Unless indeed the name was Ludius Sergius, in which case it should have a capital. The last syllable is elided before the initial vowel in l. 83.

83. famosaque moen. L.] i.e. Alexandria. By 'Lagi' is said to be meant Ptolemy I., the well-known general of Alexander, and his successor in his Aegyptian dominions. He was usually called Ptolemaeus Lagi, sub. 'filius;' from his reputed father Lagus. This is sometimes loosely written Ptolemaeus Lagus, of which Lagi here would be the genitive. But perhaps it is better to take Lagi here for the father himself, used for all his descendants the Ptolemies; i.e. the Lagidae.

ib. famosa] Here "famous." The word means any thing which people talk of, and hence, either famous or (as it more frequently is) "infamous."

84. Canopo] Even Canopus. See Sat. xv. 46. "Urbis" i.e. Rome. "Prodigia:" cf. Sat. ii. 121—123. Its crimes amounted to portents.

87. Paridem] A famous actor of pantomime under Domitian, with whom he acquired great influence. Ultimately however he was put to death by the emperor for an intrigue with Domitia.

ib. ludosque] See note on Sat. iii. 223.

88. plum. pat.] See note on Sat. i. 159.

89. segmentatis] Having a flounce or fringe attached. See note on Sat. ii. 124, "Segmenta et longos habitus."

90. famam] Reputation.

91. apud molles—cathedras] See Sat. i. 65, and note on Sat. i. 32. "Among the rich and luxurious."

93. Ionium] sub. "pontum." "Mare" would be more usual, but it sometimes requires the masculine.

94. mutandum—mare] "though so many different seas (the Tyrrhenum, Siculum, Ionium, &c.) had to be crossed."

95. timent] scil. "feminae."

99. summus vertitur aer] "They are troubled with 'vertigo.'" Lit. "the sky (upper air) turns round with them." "Summus," i. e. 'superne.' Cf. Virg. Georg. ii. 123, "summus aer arboris," for 'cacumen.' For "sentina" see Dict.

100. Illam] The former; i. e. the wife of l. 98, travelling with her husband.

100, 101. marit. convomit] transl. "spoils her husband's clothes."

101. haec] The latter; i. e. the adulteress eloping.

104. ludia] Gladiator's wife. Cf. l. 266.

105, 106. jam—coeperat] "was no chicken." The Romans did not shave at all until the 'toga virilis' was assumed; see Sat. iii. 186. Even then the beard was not 'rasa,' but 'tonsa'; "clipped with scissors." The period for shaving close (radere) was not until 40.

110. facit hoc illos] "It is this fact which makes these (Sergii)..."

ib. Hyacinthos] From the story of Hyacinthus, Apollo's beautiful favourite. We say "an Adonis."

113. accepta rude] A discharged gladiator was presented with a wooden sword ('rudis'). Hence "rude donatus," Hor. Ep. i. 1. 2. He was hence called 'rudarius.'

ib. coepisset V. vid.] "Would have been as unattractive as her husband."

115. Resp. riv. Div.] "See what competitors in their wives' embraces the gods (emperors) themselves have." The apotheosis, or deification of the deceased emperor is well known. Hence (by a still greater stretch of flattery) "praesens divus habebitur Augustus," Hor. Od. iii. 5. 2. Here the term is of course used with the keenest irony.

ib. Claud.] The emperor.

116. uxor] Messalina. A further sketch of her is given Sat. x. 329—345.

117. Palatino] See note on Sat. iv. 31.

ib. tegetem] "The bare mat of the brothel."

118. mer. Augusta] "an harlot empress." 'Sumere' is in appos. with 'praeferre' For 'cucullos' see Dict. Ant. Cf. Sat. viii. 145.

119. linquebat] sub. "virum."

120. galero] "false hair;" see Sat. viii. 208.

121. calidum] "reeking."

ib. veteri centone] "with its worn coverlid." Unless 'centone' means the curtain before the cell.

123. constitit] "stood for her hire."

123, 124. papillis—auratis] "her breasts hung with gold." This seems to have been the usage of prostitutes.

123. Lyciscae] Some low woman of the town.

Juvenal answers (143—148), “it is the face only, not the wife he cares for. Let her grow old and ugly, and she will be divorced at once.”

145. obscuri] Discoloured.

her that she is divorced. The technical phrase in a ‘divortium’ (or ‘repudium’) was “Res tuas tibi

wife. She was entitled to a return of this in full, where the divorce was not the result of her own misconduct. Here the freedman (whose presence as a witness was required by the 'Lex Julia') insolently words it as "collige sarcinulas," "pack up your traps."

147. et saepe emung.] "And you do use your handkerchief rather often."

148. sicco—naso] "Some one who has not a standing catarrh."

149. Interea] While her beauty lasts.

ib. calet] "is hot upon it;" i. e. looks alive for her own interest.

150.] "Apulian sheep-walks, and Falernian vineyards." The Apulian wool was famous. See Sat. ix. 55. Canusium was a town of Apulia.

151. pueros—tota] "every slave he has, his whole farm-labourers." The 'ergastulum' was a private convict-station ("carcer rusticus," Sat. xiv. 24) for runaway or incorrigible slaves, who worked in the fields in chains. Cf. Sat. viii. 180; also Hor. Sat. ii. 7. 118, "accedes opera agronona Sabino."

153, 154. Mense—nautis] i. e. at the feast of the Saturnalia, which was held in the "winter month," December. It was holiday-time; and booths were erected in public places for the sale of small toys for presents. These were called 'sigilla' (dimin. from 'signa'); and the two last days of the festival were called 'Sigillaria' from them. One favourite site for these booths was the 'porticus Argonautarum'. It was erected by Agrippa, and adorned with frescoes representing the exploits of Jason and his fellow-voyagers. While the booths were up, these frescoes were concealed;—'mercator Jason' was shut up (clausus), and the white booth blocked out his crew.

The above is the Scholiast's statement. It is probably an entire myth; but that is his concern. The alternative of taking "casa candida" for the snow-whitened cot of winter would be pitiable.

155. tolluntur] "must be purchased for her." Lit. "taken off." These purchases are of course not made at the humble booths of the 'sigilla,' but at the regular shops. She has her own costly version of the festival.

155, 156. crystall—murrh] sub. "vasa." For 'murrhina,' see Lat. Dict.

156—158.] It is difficult to explain why one particular gem should be referred to here. Perhaps this diamond of Beronice's had been for sale at the time.

158. sorori] i. e. to Beronice. This was the Agrippa before whom St. Paul made his defence, Acts xxv. xxvi. He was the son of the Agrippa who put St. James to death, and imprisoned St. Peter (Acts xii.), and great-grandson of Herod the Great. Beronice was his sister, and suspected of an incestuous connexion with him. Hence here ‘incestae.’

159, 160. observant ubi—porcis] i. e. in Judaea. The slighting tone of this passage will be noticed. There is one of a similar tendency, Sat. xiv. 103, 104, where see note.

159. mero] uncovered; lit. ‘the foot only.’ Jewish sacrifices at this period were offered barefoot. This may have been owing to the injunction, Exod. iii. 5. “Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground.” A sacrifice thus offered by Beronice herself is mentioned by Josephus.

162, 163. vetustus—avos] See note on Sat. v. 110.

164. bell. dir. Sabina] The intervention of the Sabine women terminated the war which followed their abduction. See Livy i. 13.

165. nigro—cyeno] This was certainly a ‘rara avis’ to Juvenal, as it is a native of Australia. Swan Bay, a retired inlet near Port Stephens, is a favourite location of these birds, which breed there by thousands.

167. Venusinam] (from Venusia, in Apulia) i. e. a rustic. Horace speaks, Epod. ii. 41, 42, of the simple life of his country-woman, “perusta solibus Pernicis uxor Appuli.”

167—171. Cornelia] The well-known ‘mother of the Gracchi;’ the popular tribunes Tiberius and Caius Gracchus. She was herself the daughter of Scipio Africanus the elder, the conqueror of Hannibal and Syphax. Her daughter Sempronius married Scip. Afric. the younger, by whom Carthage was destroyed. Hence the allusions in l. 170, 171.

172—177.] “The gods themselves cannot put up with a woman who has so good an opinion of herself.” Niobe’s arrogance was caused by the number and beauty of her children. It thus illustrates the ‘fecunda’ in l. 162.

172. Dea] i. e. Diana. Niobe, the daughter of Tantalus, and wife of Amphion (see l. 174), boasted of her superiority to Latona. The goddess had only two children, Apollo and Diana, while Niobe had six sons and six daughters. Latona's children, being incensed at this presumption, slew those of Niobe. She was herself petrified on Mount Sisyphus.

174. Amphion] The father, Niobe's husband. The exclamation in l. 173, "ipsam configite matrem!" is of course humorous. Niobe might have said this herself; Juvenal makes her husband say it for her.

ib. contrahit] "tighter bends;" lit. brings the ends together; the result of drawing the string.

175. extulit] "buried." It is the technical term; lit. carried out for burial. The nom. is Niobe.

ib. ipsum parentem] Amphion killed himself through grief.

177. scrofa—alba] Probably in allusion to the legend of the "sus (alba) Triginta capitum foetus enixa," which was found by the Trojans. Virg. Aen. viii. 43. 82.

178—183.] "And thus with other merits of the sex." See the enumeration line 162, from which one, the 'fecunda,' has just been selected for illustration. "Which of them can compensate for your being perpetually called upon to admire (lit. being 'debited' with) them? Perfection itself, tainted with vanity, fails to charm. The most devoted husband hates what he is compelled to be always praising."

183. septenis—horis] "seven hours a day;" i. e. more than half of it. See note on Sat. i. 49, 'ab octava.'

185. rancidius] 'more nauseous.'

200—230.] "If you marry, it is either for love or not. In the latter case you may as well save the expense (200—205) of the ceremony."

200. legit.—tab.] The sponsalia. See note on l. 25.

203. officin] The abstract for the concrete;—friends, clients, &c., who come ‘officii causa.’ Presents of sweet cakes (‘mustacea,’ l. 202) were given to the guests on their departure.

ib. labente] “dropping off;” i. e. going away after the wedding supper. Hence ‘crudis,’ “before they have digested their supper.” So Hor. Sat. i. 5. 49, “pila lippis inimicum et ludere crudis.”

203, 204. nec illud.—datur] Transl. “nor the wife’s present on the wedding-morrow.” Gold pieces were given her in a bowl (‘lance’) the day after the wedding.

205. Dacicus.—Germanicus] sub. “aureus nummus,” as we say ‘Naleons.’ The title Dacicus was assumed by Trajan, in whose reign this Satire seems to have been written, see l. 407 and note. That of Germanicus was given him by the Emperor Nerva on his adoption. A gold coin of Trajan, bearing both titles, was discovered near Doncaster, April, 1862.

ib. scripto radiat.—auro] “gleams with its lettered gold;”—the inscription on the coin.

209. ardeat ipsa licet] Even if she does return your love.

214. dab. affec.] Will dictate your attachments.

215. cujus.—vidit] Whom you knew while he still wore his beard; i. e. in his youth. See note on ll. 105, 106 above.

216, 217. lan. arenae] to the trainer of gladiators, and even the gladiator himself (“arenae”).

218.] “Your will must be at her dictation. In fact more than one of your rivals in her favours will you have to put in as legatees.”

219—223.] “As to your slaves, she makes away with them at pleasure.”

219. Pone cr. servo] The wife speaks. ‘Meruit quo,’ the husband’s intercession. ‘Crucem,’ the punishment of slaves and criminals of the worst kind.

222.] The wife speaks again. 'Ita—est,' 'is then?' 'Servus' is subj. and 'homo' predicate.

223. sit—voluntas] "let my will stand for argument."

225. flammea] The bride's veil, from its bright yellow colour; see Sat. ii. 124; x. 334.

ib. conterit] wears out; by marrying so often.

226. spreti—vestigia lecti] Her first husband.

227. ornatas—fores] See note on l. 52.

230. auctumnos] The sickly time of year; see l. 517 and note.

ib. titulo—sep.] to be inscribed on her tomb.

231—241.] "If they were disposed to be good wives themselves, the mothers-in-law would not let them."

234. nil simplex] "No school-girl's epistle."

235. corpore sano] "Though her daughter is as well as she ever was, she (the mother) calls in," &c.

236. Archigenen] See xiii. 98. A Greek physician, who practised at Rome under Trajan.

ib. jactat] throws back; as though their weight oppressed the invalid.

241. fil.—producere turpem] To educate her child in her own vices. 'Utile,' because she shares the profit arising from them.

243. Accusat—non est] This may have been suggested by a story in Aulus Gellius. Mancinus, an aedile, prosecuted a certain Manilia for a wound he had received from a stone thrown from her house. Manilia defended her own cause, and, on an appeal to the tribunes, succeeded in getting an acquittal.

244. libellos] This was the name given, in some cases, to the written pleadings put in by the plaintiff before the praetor. See note on Sat. iii. 213, 'vadimonia.'

245. Celso] An eminent jurist under Domitian and the subsequent emperors. "Principium atque locos," "exordium and treatment." They were technical terms in rhetoric.

246. Endromidas] A thick dress put on by athletes after practising, to prevent their taking cold.

ib. Tyrias] i. e. purple. Coarse as these dresses were, the ladies had them smart.

ib. ceroma] The mixture of oil and wax with which wrestlers were rubbed, to render the body more slippery.

247. pali] A stake ('palus' or 'stipes') was stuck upright in the ground, and the gladiators practised assaults of arms upon it; hence "vulnera."

249. omnes implet numeros] "observes all the rules." From the primary idea of counted numbers, 'numeri' came to mean any thing else that was counted. Thus it was applied to the bars in music or feet in verse. It was then used of any other regular or prescribed motion, which is the sense here.

249, 250. dignissima—tuba] i. e. to join in celebrating the 'Floralia,' or festival of Flora. This was first instituted B.C. 238, by direction of the Sibylline books, and lasted from 28th April to 2nd May. Indecent shows and farces were exhibited at the festival. There seems to be no speciality about the 'tuba.' It would naturally form part of 'a fair,' which the 'Floralia' much resembled.

251. verae—arenae] "The real thing;" i. e. the gladiator's fight itself.

255. Quale dec. rer.] "What a display of treasures!"

ib. conjugis] "Of your wife's wardrobe."

256, 257. cruris—tegimen] i. e. the 'ocrea' (l. 258); a greave or legging used by gladiators. It was made of metal, with a leather lining.

257, 258.] "If she practises with more than one class of gladiators, you will be still better off. She will not have one 'ocrea' only, but several." See Sat. viii. 202—210.

259.] "These are the gentle creatures, who complain so of the heat in the thinnest dresses." "Cyclade:" "bombycinus:" see Macleane's Juvenal ad loc.

261. monstratos] by the 'lanista' (trainer). Cf. Sat. xi. 8.

263. quam—libro] "Of how thick a bark is her 'fascia';" i. e. of how many folds is it. This was a cloth bandage wound round the leg so as to make a kind of stocking. It was made thick in this case, to protect the leg from the sword-cuts.

265, 266. Lepidi, &c.] Used for any patrician families. "Say, ye daughters of the aristocracy." By Lepidus is probably meant M. Aemilius Lepidus. See note on l. 32 above. For 'Metellus,' see note on Sat. iii. 139. Gurgus Fabius was consul B.C. 291 and 276.

267. Asyli] Some gladiator of the day.

271 seqq.] "When she feigns tears at your alleged infidelity."

276. curruca] "Cuckold that you are all the time."

276, 277. fletum—exsorbes] "kiss away her tears."

278. zelotypae] "this jealous" (in pretence).

279—281.] "But say she is actually caught in the fact;—can the lawyers put in any plea for her now? We couldn't. Quite unnecessary; she has plenty to say for herself." "Olim—homo sum:" the wife's defence under such circumstances.

280. Quintil.] The well-known rhetorician.

282, 283. nec non—mihi] "And that I should not be prevented amusing myself too."

284. homo sum] "I am a human being."

290, 291.] Capua was occupied by Hannibal's army, and besieged by Flaccus. To raise the siege, Hannibal marched against Rome, making a circular sweep round the city, which brought him to the north of it. He encamped within four miles of the walls, but was then forced to retire. The Colline gate was on the north side.

295. istos] "these."

296, 297. Sybaris, &c.] For the character of these places, see Macleane's Juvenal ad loc. The luxury of Sybaris has become proverbial.

304. concha] See note on l. 419 of this Satire. They used the 'concha,' as being shallower, and therefore easier to drink from.

306. sorbeat aera] because the mouth was opened in the 'sanna.' It was a kind of derisive whistle, the lips being parted so as to show the teeth.

307. Pudicitiae veterem — aram] She had a patrician and plebeian altar at Rome; the latter built by Virginia, the wife of the plebeian consul Volumnius. Virginia was a patrician, but excluded from the original sanctuary on account of her marriage. Either altar may be meant here.

342. tunc] in the old times (those referred to l. 287 seqq.).

345. Clodius] "At what altars is there not a Clodius now?" Clodius was one of the most profligate of the Roman nobles. In the year 62 B.C. he intruded on the rites of the 'Bona Dea,' see note on Sat. ii. 86, 87. This was at Caesar's house, whose wife Pompeia was engaged in celebrating the festival. Clodius entered the house disguised as a female musician. He was impeached for this act of sacrilege, but acquitted through private interest. An alibi, which Clodius attempted to set up, was disproved by Cicero's evidence. Clodius accordingly became the implacable enemy of the latter, and in his tribunate, B.C. 59, passed a series of measures which ended in Cicero's withdrawal into exile. Eventually Clodius was killed by the followers of Milo in a scuffle on the road to Lanuvium. Cicero's oration, 'Pro Milone,' was composed on this occasion.

351. cervice] i. e. in the litter borne on the shoulders of slaves. Here these are Syrians. In Sat. iii. 240, the bearer is a Liburnian. Cf. Sat. i. 64.

352—357.] "Ogulnia is so poor that she has to hire even the equipage with which she attends the games. And yet she will squander her last plate or porcelain on athletes." There is a refinement of satire in speaking of the games as a necessary of life. Cf. Sat. x. 80, 81.

356. levibus] "beardless."

357. nulla] "no woman." See l. 362.

359. haec] 'paupertas.'

359—361.] "Men do sometimes reflect on the consequences of extravagance."

379. cantu] music, either vocal or instrumental.

381, 382. densi—Sardonyches] Those which she wears on her fingers. They sparkle on the strings of the 'testudo' as she plays.

382. crispo] "quivering."

ib. numerantur] are struck, lit. "counted." This is from the action of playing, which resembles a person telling off numbers.

383.] "with which some effeminate 'Hedymeles' has practised." Used for any player.

385. Lamiarum] See note on Sat. iv. 154.

386. rogabat] "used to . . ."

387. Pollio] A 'citharoedus' mentioned also by Martial, Ep. iv. 61. 9, "Here, de theatro, Pollione cantante." This lady is in love with him.

ib. Capitol—quercum] Domitian instituted a literary contest in honour of the Capitoline Jove, at which both prose writers and poets recited. It was held every five years, and the victors received crowns. "Quercum:" for "quernam coronam."

388. promittere] "anticipate for."

391. Pro cith.] i. e. a 'citharoedus.'

ib. dictata] scil. "by the priest."

392. protulit] "recited."

ib. aperta] scil. "to inspect the entrails."

393, 394. antiquissime Divum—Jane pater] Janus was the tutelary deity of the beginning of all occupations. Hence Numa called the first month Januarius, after him. Prayers to Janus were also offered at the commencement of every day, from which his name of 'pater Matutinus' (Hor. Sat. ii. 6. 20) was derived. Under the same view, he was in Italy before any of the gods. See Ov. Fasti, i. 235, "Hac ego Saturnum memini tellure receptum." In this sense he is here called "antiquissime Divum."

394—397.] "Business must be very slack with you, to allow of your attending to such petitions."

397. varicosus] scil. with standing so long.

400. paludatis ducibus] "Generals with the 'paludamentum' on." This was the general's cloak (opposed to the 'sagum' of the common soldier), and was the personal symbol of the 'imperium.' The latter was conferred by a special 'lex' on each occasion of a general assuming his command; i. e. he then became 'imperator.' He assumed the 'paludamentum' as he quitted the city, and laid it aside on his return. It thus resembled the axe of the lictor's 'fasces.' See note on Sat. v. 111.

401. strictis] Transl. "exposed."

407.] Trajan's expedition against Armenia, A.D. 106, is thought to be meant here. Some comet had probably appeared at the time, and was taken as a sinister omen for the enemy.

409—412.] Antioch and other cities were nearly destroyed by earthquake A.D. 115. Trajan, who was in Antioch at the time, had a narrow escape.

409. Niphatem] This is really a mountain, part of the Taurus range. See Hor. Od. ii. 9. 20, "rigidum Niphatem." So that Juvenal's geography is at fault in treating it as a river.

415. Exorata] "although . . ." * 418—432.] "Some day, when her husband has a dinner-party, the strong-minded wife will start off for the baths:—just as the guests are expected. There she will exercise with the dumb-bells, returning to

419. nocte] "at nightfall."

ib. conchas] Probably the shell-shaped vase of unguents. So Hor. Od. ii. 7. 23, "funde capacibus unguenta de conchis."

ib. castra moveri] A frequent Latin metaphor; we say, "to march."

420, 421.] Dumb-bells ('halteres') were provided for the use of bathers, and a vacant space left in the bath-room for the exercise. This space was usually between the warm and vapour baths, the 'balneum' and 'laconicum.' The space thus left was termed 'sudatio,' so that 'sudare' l. 420 is the technical term.

425, 426.] "Ready to drain a whole wine-barrel." "Tenditur," "is extended to her."

426. urna] A three-gallon measure. Cf. Sat. xii. 44, and Hor. Sat. i. l. 54, "liquidi non amplius urna, Vel cyatho" ($\frac{1}{3}$ of a pint).

427. alter] "a second."

434. quum discumbere coepit] "as soon as she begins dinner." See note on Sat. v. 17.

435. periturae—Elissae] The well-known death of Dido. Virg. Aen. iv. 450 seqq. Cf. 610, "Di morientis Elissae."

436. committit] See note on Sat. i. 163. "Pits."

ib. inde] "in one scale."

442, 443.] Eclipses of the moon were popularly attributed to magic. Virg. Ecl. viii. 69, "Carmina vel coelo possunt deducere lunam." Hor. Epod. v. 45, 46, "Quae sidera excantata voce Thessala Lunamque coelo deripit." Cf. Epod. 18. 26. On their occurrence therefore cymbals were beat and trumpets blown, which were supposed to dissipate the magical influence. See Senec. Hippol. Act. 2. 788—792, "Et nuper rubuit (scil. 'Luna') . . . At nos solliciti lumine turbido, Tractam Thessalicis carminibus rati, Tintinnus dedimus."

much, even of a good thing. If your wife is to be a rhetorician, let her change her sex."

446. Crure — succingere] i. e. "dress like we do." Men's tunics were shorter than those of women.

447. Caedere Silvano porcum] Silvanus was the presiding power of agriculture. As such, he was specially a male divinity, and women were excluded from his sacrifices. The meaning is, therefore, as in the preceding line, "do as men do."

ib. quadrante lavari] Women and children were admitted to the public baths free. See note on Sat. ii. 152. So that to pay for one's bath was "to be a man."

449. dic. genus] "her style of rhetoric."

449, 450.] Enthymema is a term of logic. It is a syllogism, in which one premise is suppressed for brevity; hence 'curtum.' "Sermone rotato," "in round terms."

450. Torqueat] "hurl at your head."

ib. nec—omnes] "Nor have an historical quotation (the 'example' of rhetoric) always pat."

451. sed] "nay." "Quaedam" is of course ironical. "A thing or two."

452. Palaemonis] A famous grammarian under Tiberius and the subsequent reigns, and master of Quintilian. Cf. Sat. vii. 215—219.

454. tenet versus] "is up in the old poets."

455. opicae] See note on Sat. iii. 207.

458. vir. gemm.] Emeralds.

462.] See note on Sat. ii. 107.

ib. pinguia] "unctuous."

462—465. Poppaena] "foliata:" sub. "unguenta." Poppaea Sabina, the wife of Nero, kept 500 asses to supply the milk in which she bathed. "Foliata:" so called because made of the leaves of spikenard.

467. tecl. pr. reponit] "removes the first coat," i. e. the crust of bread and unguent. Lit. "tectorium" (sub. 'opus') is the plastering of a wall.

469. comites—asellas] See note on l. 463.

471. inducitur atque fovetur] "is overlaid and poulticed."

472. offus] "crumbs."

475—480.] "If the husband has offended, the slaves suffer."

476. libraria] sub. "ancilla." She weighed out the wool for the slaves to weave: see note on Sat. viii. 43. The derivation is thus from 'libra,' a pair of scales. 'Lanipendia' was another term: see l. 497, note.

476, 477. ponunt—tunicas] scil. "to be scourged."

479. frangit ferulas] They are broken upon his back.

481. Verberat, linit, &c.] scil. the mistress does.

483. diurni] (substantive) "diary."

"Transacta" means the occurrences of each day, for 'acta.' The word is used in the same sense in the term 'acta publica'; see note on Sat. ii. 136.

485. cognitione] See on Sat. vii. 228.

486. Praefectura domus] Her household administration.

ib. Sicula—aula] i. e. the court of Phalaris and Dionysius.

487. constituit] "has an assignation." Cf. Sat. iii. 12.

488. hortis] Any of the public gardens might be meant. Caesar and Agrippa both bequeathed theirs to the people. Caesar's gardens were at the foot of the Janiculum, across the Tiber. "Trans Tiberim longe cubat is, prope Caesaris hortos," Hor. Sat. i. 9. 18. Agrippa's gardens and 'thermae' were in the Campus Martius, see note on Sat. vii. 233.

Or perhaps the story of Messalina and Silius is referred to : see Sat. x. 334. In this case the 'horti Luculiani' of Claudius would be meant. The latter were on the Pincian hill.

489. Isiac.—lenae] Transl. "the bawd-priestess of Isis." The temples of Isis at Rome were the scene of every kind of debauchery. See on l. 529 post.

491. Psecas] A female slave's name.

492. Altior—cincinnus] The mistress speaks.

ib. Taurea] sub. "scutica."

495. Altera] A second slave ; while Psecas is being flogged.

ib. laevum] sub. "capillum." "The left side of the head." Psecas is supposed to have finished the right side.

497. Est in consilio] See note on Sat. iii. 162.

497—501.] "She holds a cabinet council on the occasion." Domitian did the same on the great fish question, Sat. iv.

497. matrona — lanis] "Some slave of mature age who has been elevated to be 'lanipendia.'" The slave thus designated had charge of the wool issued daily for the slaves to weave. 'Admoveri' was the technical term for preferment to an office.

498. emerita—acu, &c.] metaphorical. The technical term for military service was 'merere,' sub. 'stipendia.' Soldiers who had served their time (twenty years) were 'emeriti.'

500. Censebunt] See note on Sat. iv. 130.

503. Andromachen] Cf. Ovid, Art. A. ii. 645, "Omnibus Andromache visa est spatiosior aequo."

usually the high-heeled boot, or 'buskin' of tragedy; of course employed to give the performers greater dignity. See Hor. Sat. i. 5. 64, "Nil illi . . . tragicis opus esse cothurnis:"—'he is such a gaunt figure naturally.' From this use the word often means "tragedy" merely. See Sat. xv. 29, and l. 633 of this Satire.

507.] "And has to stand on tip-toe to be kissed."

509. Damnorum] His losses. See l. 362—365.

ib. tamquam vicina marito] "As if they had separate establishments."

511. rationibus] See note on Sat. i. 118.

511, 512. furentis Bellonae—chorus] The rites celebrated by her priests were very noisy. See Hor. Sat. ii. 3. 223, "Circumfonuit gaudens Bellona cruentis." This may have led to the secondary meaning of "fanaticus," which was the name given to her priests and those of Cybele.

512, 513. ingens Semivir] The Archigallus, or chief priest of Cy-bele. See note on Sat. ii. 111.

513. minori] "his junior" (subordinate priest).

515, 516. cui—Plebeia] A further description of the 'Archigallus.' "To whom give place the hoarse crew and inferior tambourines;"—i. e. he takes precedence of them. Hoarse;—with bawling.

517. Grande sonat] scil. this arch-priest.

ib. Septembris et Austri] See Hor. Od. ii. 14, 15, 16: "Frustra per autumnos nocentem Corporibus metuemus Austrum."

519. ipsi] "to the priest." For 'xerampelinas,' see Lat. Dict.

521. eat in] "may be carried off by."

ib. tunicas] The vestments ('xerampelinas,' l. 519) given to the priest.

522. descendet] scil. "the devotee wife."

524, 525. Superbi—regis agrum] The Campus Martius, which had formerly belonged to the Tarquins. On the discovery of the conspiracy of the sons of Brutus to restore Tarquinius Superbus, the private property of his family was confiscated. The Campus was reserved for public use, and dedicated to Mars. Hence its name of 'Campus Martius.'

526. Io] i. e. Isis, with whom she was often confounded. Io was transformed by Jupiter into a cow, to protect her from Juno's jealousy. Isis was often represented with a cow's face, and this may have led to the confusion. 'Candida Io'—because the cow was white.

528, 529. aedem—ovili] The 'antiquum ovile' was a portion of the Campus Martius, near the Circus Flaminius. It was appropriated for holding the 'Comitia Centuriata,' and originally fenced off with hurdles. From the resemblance of these to a sheep-pen ('ovile') it derived its name. Julius Caesar replaced it with a magnificent building, called 'Septa Julia.' The latter was destroyed by fire under Titus, but restored by Domitian, who at the same time built the temples of Isis and Serapis near it.

The worship of Isis was introduced at Rome in the time of Sulla. It met with great opposition at first on account of the licentious character of her festivals. The same cause, however, made them popular; and from the time of Vespasian

Isis became an established Roman divinity. Her principal temple was that above referred to, and from which she was called 'Campensia.'

530. dominae] of the goddess herself.

531.] Spoken of the devotee; of course ironically. "Precisely the heart and mind with which heavenly beings would commune!"

532. Ergo] From the same superstitious temper.

533.] The priests of Isis were shorn, hence "calvo." Both priests and worshippers wore linen robes.

534. populi—derisor] Imposing on their credulity. Anubis, the attendant of Isis and her husband Osiris, was always represented with a dog's head. So Virg. Aen. viii. 698, "latrator Anubis." The dog's grin gives particular force to the "derisor."

538—541.] "Your wife's tears forsooth have persuaded Osiris (after being properly bribed), to pardon any little faux pas she may have committed."

538. movisse caput] i. e. as a sign of favour.

ib. argentea serpens] This seems to have been carried in the processions of Isis and Osiris. See Ov. Am. ii. 13. 13, "Pigraque labatur circa donaria serpens."

540. anser] The goose was sacrificed to Isis. See Ov. Fast. i. 453, 454, "anser Det jecur in lances, Inachi lauta, tuas." Geese were also the favourite diet of the Egyptian priests. See Herod. 2. 37, χηνίων πληθὺς τι ἐκάστω γίνεται πολλὸν ἡμέρης ἐκάστης.

542. ille] The Archigillus.

542—545. cophino fenoque—mendicat—sacerdos arboris] See note on Sat. iii. 14—16.

543. Judaea] i. e. the Jews;—the country used for the people.

ib. arcanam—in aurem] Jews were occasionally in bad odour at Rome under the empire. See Acts xviii. 2, διὰ τὸ διατεταχέναι Κλαύδιον χωρίζεσθαι πάντας τοὺς Ἰουδαίους ἐκ τῆς Ῥώμης. So also Sueton. Domit. 12, "Deferebantur qui vel improfessi Judaicam intra urbem viverent vitam." Accordingly, they had to carry on their fortune-telling with some precaution. Hence "tremens" here.

544, 545.] See note on Sat. xiv. 103, 104, ad fin.

546. illa] scil. "Judaea."

ib. implet manum] 'gets a fee.'

552. faciet—ipse] "In fact, he will kill one for the purpose, and then accuse some one else of the crime."

555. oracula cessant] The Delphic oracle had been destroyed by Nero. It was restored by Hadrian, but subsequently to the publication of this Satire. The oracle was finally suppressed by Theodosius.

557—559.] Otho's insurrection against Galba was in great part due to the suggestions of the astrologer Ptolemaeus (called "Seleucus" in Sueton. Otho, 4). See Tac. Hist. i. 22—36, "Ptolemaeus jam et sceleris instructor" (cap. 22). Galba was killed in the revolt; see note on Sat. ii. 104. He is the "magnus civis" of l. 559.

557. saepius exsul] Astrology was prohibited by law at Rome. The words of Tacitus (cap. 22 above) are, "genus hominum . . . quod in civitate nostra et prohibebitur semper, et retinebitur." Persons practising it were punished with imprisonment or exile. See ll. 561, 562.

558.] "Through whose intimacy with Otho, and hiring scroll." He had cast a horoscope, predicting that Otho should be emperor.

559. obit] contr. for 'obiit.' "Was assassinated."

560—564.] "It is in fact the public stigma attached to astrologers, which procures them their lady clients." See on l. 557.

560. Inde—si &c.] "They (the women) confide in an astrologer, precisely because."

ib. ferro] The iron handcuff. I. e. because he has been in confinement.

561. castrorum] This probably refers to the case of some particular astrologer. They frequently promised victory to the contending generals of the day. Pending the issue of his predictions, one of these prophets may have been carried with the army in confinement. It is not of course meant that astrologers (or any malefactors) were sent to the military prison for confinement, as the usual practice.

562. genium indemnatus habebit] "will be allowed (by the ladies) to have any talent, unless he has been under a penal sentence." "Mathematicus." "astrologer:" as in Sat. xiv. 248.

563. Sed qui] i. e. 'nemo nisi qui:' in apposition with line 562.

ib. perit] Undergone capital punishment.

563, 564. cui—Seripho] "who just got off with transportation, and has come back at last from serving his time." For Cyclada and Seripho, see Sat. i. 73 and note; x. 170.

565. lento de funere] inquires how much longer she will be in dying.

566. Tanaquil tua] Your wife. Tanaquil was the wife of Tarquinius Priscus:—"perita, ut vulgo Etrusci, coelestium prodigiorum mulier," Livy i. 34. On their removal from Tarquinii to Rome, an eagle flew away with Tarquinius' felt cap, just as the carriage reached the Janiculum. Tanaquil however "alta sperare virum jubet; alitem—levasse superpositum capiti decus, ut divinitus eadem redderet."

569. Haec] the wife who consults the astrologers. "She does not herself understand the art. What is really formidable ('illius,' l. 572) is the wife who casts her own horoscope."

572. occursus] It is a baddish omen even to meet her.

573.] Ladies carried amber ('succina') in their hands, to give them an agreeable scent.

574.] 'Ephemeris' in its first sense is "a diary;" with 'mathematica' expressed or understood it means "a calendar." This was used to ascertain the position of the stars for astrological calculations.

576. revocata] "because..."

ib. numeri] So Hor. Od. i. 11. 2, 3, "nec Babylonios Tentaris numeros." The first sense of the word 'numeri' is "numerals;" 1, 2, 3, &c. From this it came to be used (amongst other senses) for the science of numbers, or arithmetic. (Possibly it meant the counters themselves, which were used in calculation:—just as 'numeri,' for the same reason, sometimes means 'dice.' See Ovid, Art. Am. ii. 203, "Seuludet, numerosque manu jactabit eburnos.") In the Latin of the later republic and empire, however, 'numeri' had acquired the specific sense of calculations of the stars, either for astronomy or natural magic. See Cic. Fin. v. 29, "Plato Aegyptum peragravit, ut de sacerdotibus numeros et coelestia acciperet." So too Lucan i. 644, "numerisque moventibus astra." Similarly Stat. Theb. 4. 411, "numerisque sequentibus astra."

ib. Thrasylli] A Rhodian astrologer, who predicted that Tiberius should obtain the empire. He accompanied the latter to Rome, and obtained great reputation in his art.

577.] "If she has only to drive a mile out of town." "Lapidem," sub. 'milliarium,'—"mile-stone." These were erected on all the leading roads out of Rome. The distances of various places from the gates of the latter were inscribed on the 'milliarium aureum';—a gilt pillar which Augustus had placed in the forum.

ib. hora] the (propitious) hour.

578. libro] The (astrologer's) scroll.

579. inspecta] Used with the strict participle meaning. "She does not ask for, &c., until she has inspected." "Genesis," "her nativity;" i. e. the planetary influences (or 'house') under which she was born. Cf. Sat. xiv. 248.

581. Petosiris] An astrologer of ancient Egypt. It is here used for any professor of the art.

582—591.] "Even the poorest must have the stars read for them."

582. mediocris] "in mean circumstances."

582, 583.] "She will consult the fortune-tellers in the Circus Maximus." Cf. Hor. Sat. i. 6. 113, 114, "Fallacem circum vespertinum pererro Saepe forum; adsisso divina." See also note on Sat. iii. 65.

583. metarum] The Circus was a long oval enclosure. Down the centre of it ran a straight low wall called 'spina,' round which the chariots were driven in the races. This wall was called 'spina' from its resemblance to a back-bone:—it was, of course, unconnected with the sides.

At each end of the 'spina,' not upon, but in front of it, was a goal, called the 'meta' (hence here, "spatium utrumque metarum"). This 'meta' consisted of a base, supporting three wooden cones ornamented with carving. Upon the 'spina' itself stood, at one end, two pillars, on which the 'ova' were placed. The 'ova' were seven balls of wood, so called from their shapes. One of these was taken down at the termination of each of the seven courses of the chariots, to show the spectators how many remained. On the other end of the 'spina' stood two corresponding pillars, supporting seven figures of dolphins; hence the "delphinorum columnas," l. 590. These apparently served for ornament only.

583. sortes duces] draw lots.

ib. frontem] Fortune-tellers of that day examined the lines on the forehead, as well as the hand.

584. poppysma] "A douceur." Ποπύσσις, from which the word is formed, is to smack the lips, or whistle—especially to produce the sound made by grooms in rubbing down a horse to keep him quiet. The word thus got the sense of coaxing or caressing. It may possibly have become a cant term for "a gratuity."

585. Indus] i. e. a Brahmin.

587. publica fulg. condit] When any one had been struck by lightning, the spot where this occurred was at once consecrated. See Hor. Art. Poet. 471, "triste bidental Moverit incestus." A sheep ('bidental') was sacrificed there, and other ceremonies performed by a priest appointed for the purpose—here the "aliquis senior, qui fulgura condit." The priests were hence called 'bidentales,' and the place itself 'bidental.' "Publica," must be construed adverbially; "at the public expense."

588. aggere] See note on Sat. v. 153—155.

589. Quae—aurum] i. e. "the pauper." "Longum aurum;" probably the gold necklace worn by women.

590. ante] previously. Or it may be the preposit. governing "phalas" and "columnas," with "augurem" understood after "consultit."

ib. phalas] These were towers erected between the 'metae' (see note on l. 583) and the side-walls of the Circus, on the occasion of sham-fights there. "Delphinorum columnas:" see note last cited.

591. saga vendenti] A slop-seller. The 'sagum' was the common soldier's cloak. "An" is here "whether."

592. Hae] The poor. "Bad as these are, they do not do what the rich do."

ib. numquam—videndus] "whom you had safest not meet in the forenoon." Omens were especially drawn from what was met at the commencement of any thing, as of the day, the journey, &c. This ill-favoured half-caste would have been the worst of omens.

ib. suppositos] sub. "infantes."
 "Supposititious children." See on l. 603.

ib. gaudia—votaue] Of the

603. ad—lacus] "tricked;" i. e. excited by a trickery practised at the Spurci lacus. The pool thus named was in the vegetable market ('forum olitorium'), near the 'columna lactaria.' At the latter, foundlings were exposed, and fed with milk. Women who were childless occasionally passed off one of these foundlings as their own.

615. avunculus—Neronis] i. e.

Caligula. Caesonia (l. 616) was his wife, and secured his constancy by love-potions, which were thought to have unsettled his intellect.

616. frontem—pulli] i. e. (by an hyperbole) the Hippomanes; see l. 133 above. This was an alleged excrecence on a foal's forehead, which drove the dam mad if she smelt it;—hence the name 'hippomanes.' The dam accordingly tore off the substance and swallowed it. She was often, however, anticipated, as it was collected for use in love-charms. Cf. Virg. Aen. iv. 515, "nascentis equi de fronte revulsus Et matri praereptus amor."

618. ardebant—ruebant] From the frantic conduct of Caligula in his derangement, occasioned by Caesonia's potions. See note on l. 615. "Cuncta," i. e. "the whole empire."

ib. descendere—in coelum] To receive apotheosis. See note on l. 115. The descendere is of course highly ironical.

624, 625.] "Whereas Caligula's poison ('haec,' see note on l. 615) led to his practising every kind of cruelty." Caligula's thirst for blood was as insatiable as Marat's. It was embodied in his well-known wish, "Utinam populus Romanus unam cervicem haberet!" Suet. Cal. 30.

627—630.] "One could not object, perhaps, if they only poisoned their husband's illegitimate children ('natos de pellice'), or, as things go, his child by a former marriage ('privignum'). The mischief is that, now-a-days, they poison their own."

634. cothurnum] See note on l. 506 above.

635. priorum] My predecessors in satire.

those of l. 643), not the real life of Rome.”

638. Pontia] She destroyed her own children by poison, in Nero’s reign. So Martial ii. 84, “ O mater, qua nec Pontia deterior.”

643—652.] “ One can quite believe now what tragedy tells of Medea and Procne. In fact, I must not pretend to equal these ; they were real achievements, considering the period. The only point in which they do not quite come up to us, is that they were not perpetrated for money.” Medea is called “ Colchis,” from her birth-place. For Procne, see note on Sat. vii. 92.

comparison of the "feruntur praecipites" is confined to the clause 'ut saxa jugis abrupta.' The following words, "quibus—recedit," merely amplify the "abrupta." The consequences of the rocks breaking away are that the mountain loses part of its substance, the line of cliff is thrown further back, and the side becomes disrupted. Or the antecedent to "quibus" may be "jugis":—"from which the mountain (supporting mass below) is imperceptibly withdrawn."

652—661.] "So much for the way they treat their children. As to their husbands' lives, they are not worth an hour's purchase. Alcestim died to save her husband; our wives, if they were permitted a similar exchange, would sacrifice us to save a pet spaniel."

652. spectant] "See exhibited on the stage."

655. Belides] The Danaides; so called from their grandfather Belus. They were married to the fifty sons of Aegyptus, and murdered them in one night, with the exception of Hypermnestra, who spared her husband Lynceus. The story is well known from Horace: "acelus atque notas Virginum poenas," Od. iii. 11. 25—52.

ib. Eriphylae] The sister of Adrastus, and wife of Amphiaraus, one of the "Seven against Thebes." He was a prophet, and foresaw the failure of the expedition. He was unable to escape, however, as he had promised on his marriage to abide by his wife's judgment on any point in which his own opinion differed from that of Adrastus. In the present case, she had been bribed by Polyneices with a necklace to advocate the war. Jupiter opened a chasm in the earth which swallowed Amphiaraus, and he became immortal.

656. mane] "any morning."

657—661.] "The only difference is, that heroine (Clytemnestra) used the axe, while ours adopt the less rude agency of poison. Unless indeed their husbands take antidotes, in which case they will follow the precedent."

659. tenui—rubetae] i. e. by poison. See 'rubeta' in Lat. Dict.

660. Atrides] i. e. the husband.

661. Pontica—regis] "The Pontic drugs of the thrice-conquered king." In other words, the drugs (antidotes against poison) of the thrice-conquered king of Pontus. Mithridates is meant. On his first accession he was threatened with numerous conspiracies, and as a precaution against them, resorted to the use of antidotes. Cf. Sat. xiv. 254, 255. His constitution in this way became practically poison-proof. In fact, he could not even poison himself, as he tried to do on his final overthrow. He is called "ter victi" here, because successively defeated by Sylla, Lucullus, and Pompey, in the three Mithridatic wars.

1. Caesare] Perhaps Domitian. See note on Sat. vi. 387. It is uncertain, however. See note on l. 92.

4. conducere (hire) balneolum—furnos] i. e. turn bath-keepers or bakers.

6, 7. Aganippes vallibus] See their topography in Maclean's loc.

7. atria] The 'atria auctionaria' of Cicero (de Leg. Agr. i. 3).

8. quadrans] See Smith's Dict. Antiq. voc. 'as.'

ib. Pieria—in arca] In the poet's strong-box. See Sat. i. 90 and note.

9. ames] "acquiesce in;" like the Gr. στίπυς.

ib. Machaerae] Some leading auctioneer of the day.

10. commissa — auctio] A sale "bonorum commissorum;" of "forfeited property."

11. armaria] Fixed presses for books. We must not think of the arrangements of a modern library. The books were manuscript rolls; see note on Sat. i. 5, 6. They were kept either in these presses, or in moveable cases ('capsae,' or 'scrinia'). "Cistas" here is very likely used for 'scrinia'; cf. Sat. iii. 206; but it may mean boxes for any purpose.

12. Pacci—Fausti] Inferior dramatic poets. 'Alcyonem,' &c., are the names of their plays.

13, 14.] "Although this is better than making money as suborned witnesses, which otherwise they must come to."

14, 15.] "Although these new-made equites (originally slaves from Asia Minor) may do so." The emperors frequently admitted freedmen into the equestrian order; and even slaves were allowed to wear the gold ring, which was its badge. Cf. Hpr. Epod. iv. 2—15,

 Et crura dura compe . . .

16. altera] (lit. "second") Gal-lia, i. e. Galatia, in Asia Minor. A body of Gauls under Leonnorius and Lutarus crossed the Hellespont, B.C.
 279, and seized on part of Bithynia.
 The portion they thus occupied acquired the name of Gallo-Graecia, contracted into Galatia. See Livy xxxviii. 16.

ib. nudo talo] See Sat. i. 111, and note there.

ib. traducit] "sends over;" lit.
 transports.

18. posthac] "Now literature has an imperial patron."

20. Hoc agite] "Be industrious."
 'Hoc agere,' or 'id agere,' is an idiom of constant occurrence in this sense. Literally it would be, "Do this (i. e. whatever you are doing) and nothing else;" from which it passes naturally into the above meaning.

23. ideo] "with that object."
ib. croceae—tabellae] The "mem-brana" was one of the materials on which books were written. See note on Sat. i. 5, 6. Its back was usually stained with saffron, as it was not intended to be written on; see the same note.

25. Ven.—marito] Vulcan; i. e.
 the fire.

26. tinea] abl. of the instrument.

27. vigilataque proelia] The descriptions of battles over which you have sat up a whole night.

cra] Statues of eminent literary men were placed in the library on the Palatine, adjoining the temple of Apollo. See note on Sat. iv. 31, and cf. Hor. Ep. i. 3. 17, "Scripta, Palatinus quaecunque recepit Apollo." The statues were crowned with ivy; see Persius, Prolog. 5, 6, "Illis relinquo, quorum imagines lambunt Haederae sequaces." "Macra imagine" is used because the poet represented was lean himself.

30—32.] "For patrons now-a-days admire literature much as children do a peacock's tail;" i. e. have no critical taste for it.

32. sed] "meanwhile,"

33. pelagi—cassidis—ligon.] Occupations which would bring you money. "Cassidis," i. e. military service.

36, 37.] "I should like you just to hear the shifts by which now-a-days a patron ("iste, quem colis") excuses himself from giving you any thing."

36, 37. iste—relictæ] "Your tutelary deity." The patron has to be worshipped now-a-days, not Apollo and the Muses.

38, 39.] "For instance. The patron ("ipse") is a poet himself; Homer's equal, only the latter lived first. How can you expect him to give you any thing?"

39—47.] "All he will do for you, is to lend you an empty room to recite in;—he won't pay for the hire of the benches."

40. maculosas] "mangy." Another reading is "Maculonous."

ib. commodat] See note on Sat. i. 1—12.

41. longe] In some out-of-the-way part of the town.

ib. ferrata] "unoccupied;" lit. chained; i. e. locked up.

41. servire jubetur] "is put at your disposal."

42.] This carries out the idea of "ferrata," l. 40. The door is chained up, like the town gates during a siege ("sollicitæ").

43—47.] "He will provide ("scit dare") what costs him nothing,—a packed audience of his own clients. But neither he, nor any other of these patrons ("regum:" cf. Sat. v. 14) will give you the cost of the necessary preparations." "Subsellia:" the benches of the audience, arranged in tiers, in a semicircle, like the seats of a theatre. See note on Sat. iii. 154. "Anabathra:" the steps to the tiers. "Orchestra:" the level space enclosed by the semicircular tiers of benches. The poet stood in the front of the "orchestra" to recite, and the élite of the audience had seats there, also in imitation of the theatre. See note last cited. It will be observed that the relatives, "quae," "quae," with the subsequent words in l. 46, 47, have the force of epithets. The translation will thus be, "the steps supported ("quae pendent") on hired planking, and the orchestra arranged ("posita") with its borrowed chairs;" lit. chairs which have to be returned. "Posita" is "arranged," or "set;" i. e. having the chairs set upon it.

48. hoc agimus] See note on l. 20. "And yet we work (at literature), and persist in 'ploughing the rock.'"

50. si] "even if."

53. cui—vena] "whose (poetic) vein is not jobbed;" i. e. who has one of his own, not borrowed.

55. communi—moneta] "nor coins his hackneyed lay at the mint of commonplace." "Triviale:" "what you may find in every cross-way."

57, 58. omnis—impatiens] i. e.

"qui nihil acerbi patitur."

60. thyrsum.] Properly the pole borne in Bacchic festivities. See note on Sat. vi. 70. The touch of this was supposed to cause ἔνθουσιασμός, as Horace, Od. ii. 19. 8, "Parce, gravi metuende thyrsō." Here it is used for poetical inspiration.

ib. sana] i. e. "non ebria." But "moesta" is also read.

62. quum dicit—Eueo] i. e. when he wrote his "Ode to Bacchus." See l. 5. 7 of the Ode last cited, "Eueo! recenti mens trepidat metu . . . Eueo! parce, Liber."

64. feruntur] "are carried captive."

ib. dominis Cirrhæ Nysaeque] i. e. Apollo and Bacchus. "Cirrhæ" was the port of Delphi. "Nysa" was a mountain in Thrace, to which Bacchus was carried on his birth, and brought up by the nymphs.

69. puer] "slave."
 70, 71.] "his descriptions would

72. coth.] See note on Sat. vi. 506.
 lb. Rubr. Lapp.] A tragic poet, not otherwise known.

73.] "Whose 'Atreus' (an uncompleted tragedy) stands in pawn for his crockery and cloak." For "alveolos," cf. Sat. v. 88.

74. Numitor] One of these wealthy patrons. "Infelix" is of course iron-ical,—"poor man."

75. Quintillae] his mistress.

75-77. non defuit—domitum] "In fact, he did scrape together enough to buy a tame lion, who eats as much meat as a dozen men."

77, 78.] Ironical.

79. Lucanus] i. e. a poet who is well off. Lucan's father, L. Annaeus, held a government situation, in which he amassed a large fortune.

80. Serrano—Saleio] Indigent poets. Serranus is mentioned as such by Martial, Ep. iv. 37. 3, "(debet) decies Sabinus, alterumque Serranus." For "Saleius," see Taccit. de Orat. 9, "Quis Saleium nostrum deducit, aut salutat, aut prose-quitur? . . . Laudavius nuper, ut
 . . . eximiam Vespasiani liberalitatem, quod quingenta sestertia Basso (i. e.
 Saleio) donasset."

83-87.] It would appear from this that Statius wrote tragedies, but they have not been preserved. His only extant works are the Thebais (by which he is best known), the Silvae, and an unfinished fragment, the Achillëis.

84. diem] scil. "for reciting."

86. fregit subsellia versu] i. e. by Esurit, intactam Paridi nisi vendat Agaven.

 Semestri vatū digitos circumligat auro:—
 Quod non dant proceres, dabit histrio. Tu Camerinos
 Et Bareas, tu nobilium magna atria curas?—

90

the applause which it elicited. The phrase is commonly taken as an hyperbole. Cf. Sat. i. 12, 13, where a similar exaggeration is used of the reciter himself. But perhaps, like Addison's trunk-maker, the audience vented their enthusiasm on the benches.

87.] "Unless Paris purchases his last new tragedy, the Agave." For "Paris," see Sat. vi. 87, and note; also note on l. 92 post. For "Agaven," see note on Sat. vi. 72. The piece is not now extant. "Intactam" is literally "virgin."

Theatrical performances took place at the public games. See note on Sat. vi. 67. Originally, the latter were under the charge of the aediles; see note on Sat. iii. 162. Under the empire, however, the aedileship having declined in importance as the games advanced, their management was transferred to the praetor. The latter, therefore, properly had the selection of the pieces for performance; but the wishes of a leading actor like Paris would of course be attended to.

88—92.] "In fact, a court favourite (like Paris) is the only person to whom poets can really look for patronage."

88, 89. militiae—larg. honorem, semestri—auro i. e. "confers the appointment of military tribune." These were the 'tribuni militares,' of whom there were four (afterwards increased to six) in each legion. They must not be confounded with the "tribuni militum cum consulari potestate," who occur in the earlier books of Livy. These latter were a temporary substitute for the Consul, and existed only from B.C. 444—367. The 'tribuni mili-tares' were permanent officers, who commanded in turns, and were especially charged with the maintenance of discipline in the legions. As is usual with government situations, the appointment was in great request under the empire. Cf. Sat. i. 58; x. 94. To gratify as many applicants as possible, it was now conferred for six months only, instead of a year as formerly. Hence it is here called "semestri auro";—'auro' being the 'aureo annulo,' which the tribunes wore. The duties of the office were probably discharged by deputy; so that it became a mere sinecure, and would seem from this passage to have been bestowed on successful authors, in lieu of a money payment.

90—92.] The life of Juvenal, ascribed to Suetonius, states that this passage led to the poet's banishment. Domitian, it is said, resented it as an attack on his favourite Paris, and sent him into honourable exile in Egypt, under pretence of a military command. The banishment itself very likely occurred, but it could hardly be in consequence of this passage. The Satire was probably not written before the time of Hadrian. And, even if written in Domitian's reign, it speaks highly of his patronage of literature: see the opening lines: nor is the present passage necessarily meant as offensive to Paris. Juvenal returned from his exile after Domitian's assassination.

90, 91. Camerinos—Bareas] Noble families; used generally for the aristocracy of the period. The 'Camerini' belonged to the Sulpicia gens. For 'Bareas,' see Sat. iii. 116.

92. Praefectos] Originally, these were the commanders of the 'alae,' i. e. the contingent supplied by the allied states of Italy ('socii'), who were not officered by themselves. Under the Empire, however, the term was applied also to the commanders of the 'cohortes' in the Roman army. See note on Sat. x. 94, 95.

ib.] Pelopea and Philomela are names of tragedies. Pelopea was the daughter of Thyestes, and mother by him of Aegisthus. She was also the third wife of her uncle Atreus. Philomela was the daughter of Pandion, king of Attica. Her sister Procne was married to Tereus, the king of Thrace, who deserted her, and feigned an account of her death. By this means he procured the hand of Philomela. When the truth became known, Procne revenged herself by killing her son Itys, and serving up the body as a dish at his father's table. Eventually Philomela was transformed into a night-ingale, Procne into a swallow, and Tereus into a hawk.

93. pulpita] "the stage." See note on Sat. iii. 154.

ib. pascunt] By procuring them these appointments.

94, 95. Maecenas—Procul. &c.] Names of the old nobility (see l. 90, 91), who were liberal patrons of literature. "Procleius" is perhaps the Procleius of Hor. Od. ii. 6. "Notus in fratres animi paterni." "Fabius" may be Fabius Maximus, a patron of Ovid, as was also "Cotta." "Lentulus" was a partizan of Cicero.

97. Decembri] The holiday month of the Romans, as the "Saturnalia" occurred in it. See note on Sat. vi. 153—157. Cf. Hor. Sat. ii. 7. 4; "libertate Decembri."

98. Vester—fecundior] Ironical.

100. pagina] Sheet of the 'papyrus.' See note on Sat. i. 5, 6.

101. crescit—papyro] "grows (and not costlessly) with much papyrus." That is, even the material on which it is written has cost a good deal.

104. acta legenti] "to his newspaper reader." See note on Sat. ii. 136. 'Anagnostae,' or readers aloud, were habitually employed by the wealthy; and these "acta" (of which they could afford to pay for copies), probably formed an important part of the reader's daily task. There is no reference here to the 'actuarius,' or 'notary,' the short-hand writer who reported the proceedings of the senate, ('acta publica') officially. "Legenti" might indeed be used for 'scribenti' or advocates,

'excipienti,' the more usual phrase. But the "quis dabit . . . quantum daret" would then have no sense, as it must mean a payment which any one might make in his private capacity, not that of a public official.

105.] The patron quotes Horace to justify his neglect of them. See Ep. ii. 2. 77, 78.

107. libelli] "pleadings." See note on Sat. vi. 244.

108. Ipsi] The advocates.

ib. creditor] The client, for whose debt the counsel is suing.

109, 110.] "or if he has at his side one, still more eager than the former, who comes with his huge ledger to a litigated (lit. doubtful) debt." Properly "nomen" is the debtor's name written in the "codex," or ledger; but it is of constant use in Latin in the secondary sense of "debt." The creditor of l. 108 (who is the "illo" in 109) is suing for debt, where the claim is not contested; the "acrior" (creditor) in l. 109, 110, is suing where it is; so that the "dubium" is emphatic. For "codex," see note on Sat. i. 63.

111. folles] "lungs;" lit. "bel-lows." It means of course those of the advocate.

112. messem] "the fee."

114.] Lacerta was a well-known

'auriga' in Domitian's reign. He belonged to the 'russata (red) factio;' hence "russati" here. These 'factiones' were four companies into which the drivers at the chariot races in the Circus were divided, and which represented the four seasons of the year. The other three were—'prasina' (green), for spring; 'veneta' (blue), for autumn; and 'alba' ('albata') for winter; the 'russata' itself standing for summer. This division into rival companies of course greatly increased the excitement of the races. See note on Sat. iii. 223. The betting often ran high upon them: in Sat. xi. 199 it is called the 'audax sponso.' A victorious 'auriga' received a considerable sum of money.

115. Consedere duces &c.] A parody on the contest of Ajax and Ulysses for the arms of Achilles in Ovid. See Met. xiii. l. seqq.

116. pro libertate] scil. of your client. He has been claimed as a slave by some alleged proprietor.

116, 117. bubulco judice] "with some cowherd for juror." See note on Sat. iii. 213, 'vadimonium.' The "judices" were originally chosen from the senate, but afterwards from the 'equestris ordo' as well. In the decline of the republic their number was greatly augmented, and the qualification much reduced; so that the office was often filled by persons of mean condition. The "bubulcus" here would have been a "judex" from one of the 'rusticae tribus.'

118. scalarum] "your garret;" lit. the staircase to it. The upper stories of the Roman houses were underlet in flats ('coenacula'), often approached by a separate staircase on the outside, and occupied only by indigent persons. Cf. Sat. iii. 199. The wealthy lived entirely on the lower floors.

ib. vir.—palmae] These were hung up at the door of an advocate who had won his cause. So Martial. Ep. vii. 28, "Sic fora mirentur . . . Excolat et geminas plurima palma fores."

120. bulbi] roots; i. e. carrots, onions, &c. "Roots" is still the term for these in one Oxford college.

ib. Afrorum epimenia] "A slave's (lit. African's) monthly allowance for diet;" also called 'menstruum.' See note on Sat. xiv. 126.

121. devectum] "come down the Tiber:" i. e. Etruscan or Sabine wine, which were the inferior qualities. See Hor. Od. i. 20, l. 9, 10, "Vile potabis modicis Sabinum Cautiaris." The 'fine wines' of Campania were shipped to Ostia, and so came up the stream.

122, 123. Si—unus] "Say even you had as many as four briefs, and made a gold piece by them, you have still to pay the fee of the "pragmaticus." The "pragmatici" prompted counsel in court on the law of the case: a practice derived, with the term itself, from the Greek "bar," but which was only introduced at Rome under the Empire. The "pragmatici" (and probably those who employed them) did not stand high with the profession. Not that counsel were supposed, of necessity, to know the law. But where they did not, the orthodox practice was to submit a case for the opinion ("responsum") of a juriconsult. The "pragmatici" carried writing-tablets, and were hence also called "tabelliones."

122. aureus] sub. 'nummus.' See Smith's Dict. Ant. 182.

124—149.] "It is true, eminent counsel like Aemilius may command their own fee; and yet, very likely our argument was the better of the two. This is just (125—128) because he has position, owing to his family and supposed wealth; the only grounds (129—149) on which an advocate can succeed now-a-days." Aemilius is not known otherwise.

125—128.] "He has ancestral trophies ("currus, quadrijuges," &c.), and, in fact, a fine equestrian statue of himself." Eminent counsel seem to have received this distinction; see Martial, Epig. ix. 70. 5, 6, "Tam grave percussis incudibus aera resultant, Causidicum medio cum faber aptat equo."

 Et strepitu et facie majoris vivere census.
 Sed finem impensae non servat prodiga Roma.
 Fidimus eloquio? Ciceroni nemo ducentos Nunc dederit numos, nisi fulserit annulus ingens.

128. lusca] The common rendering is probably right, "blind of one eye," as in Sat. x. 158. In fact, the word seems never to mean totally blind. Why the statue had one eye thus closed, is another question. "To represent Aemilius in the act of taking aim," is the answer generally given. But this would be a monstrous intention to impute to a statuary. How do we know that Aemilius had not lost an eye,—with such effect on the features, that it could not be disguised even in his bronze cast?

129. Sic] i. e. by imitating this display of Aemilius, as their only chance of getting a practice. See l. 135—149.

129. Pedito — Matho — Tongilli] Inferior advocates of the day. For Matho, see note on Sat. i. 32.

ib. conturbat] "Smashes;" i. e. goes bankrupt. It was the technical term; Mart. ix. 4, 5, "Conturbabit Atlas, et non erit uncia tota." "Rationes" ("accounts") is said to be understood after it.

130. rhinocer.] A vessel for unguents, made of the horn of that animal.

131. turba] scil. of his slaves.

ib. lutulenta] With following him through the streets.

132. juv. — Medos] Slaves from that country, who bore the litter. Sat. iii. 240 speaks of a Liburnian bearer.

ib. asserere] With the pole by which the litter is carried; i. e. with the weight of his litter.

133. murrhina] See Sat. vi. 156.

134.] "Enim" explains the "em-turus" of l. 133:—how Tongillius, having no money, can make such purchases. His display in dress gets him credit. Lit. the line is "His purple, 'direct from the ship,' with its Tyrian thread, guarantees his solvency."

ib. stlataria] Stlatra was a merchant-ship, not merely a "privateer," as it is usually rendered; and "stlataria" may mean 'imported.' But it is quite uncertain.

135—149.] See note on l. 129. "They are obliged to keep up appearances."

136. amethystina] "violet;" the amethyst being of that colour. "Vestimenta" is understood.

137. facie] "appearance." For "census," see note on Sat. v. 57.

138.] "The fact is, expense at Rome is unlimited."

139—149.] "As to eloquence, Cicero himself would not get into practice by it. Nobody will get practice, but those who are either wealthy, or believed to be so."

142. togati] "clients in correct costume." See note on Sat. i. 96.

143. conducta] "hired."

143, 144, 145. Paulus—Cossus—Basilus] Indigent advocates, not otherwise known.

146.] "When has Basilus ever the chance of exhibiting a weeping mother?" i. e. when is he ever employed in an important case? The afflicted relatives of the parties were brought into court to enhance the effect of the counsel's speech. Usually, of course, this would be on the defendant's side; but it might also be useful to a plaintiff. The prosecution of a fraudulent guardian, for instance, would have been an opportunity to introduce the "flentem matrem."

147—149.] "You must go to Gallia, or Africa, if you really wish to make any thing by your oratory." For "Gallia," see note on Sat. i. 44; and cf. Sat. xv. 111. No other writer speaks of Africa being famous for its orators.

151. perim. saevos—tyr.] An usual theme for declamations. "Vectius," l. 150, is the rhetoric teacher.

152. legerat] scil. the class.

153. profert] "recites," as in Sat. vi. 392.

ib. cantabil] "din into you." So Ter. Heaut. ii. 3. 19, "qui horum mores cantabat mihi."

ib. versibus] "Versus" is properly a line of writing, and usually a line or verse in poetry. But it is occasionally used, like 'carmen' and 'numeri,' of prose.

154. crambe] See Lat. Dict.

155, 156. Quis color—sagittae] Terms from the rhetoric schools:—"How to embellish; how to class the cause; where the real point at issue lies; what shafts (opponent's arguments) may be aimed from this or that quarter." "Color," as in Sat. vi. 280, is "rhetorical ornament."

158. mercedem—scio] The pupil speaks. "Ask for pay, indeed! Why, what have I learned from you?"

158—160.] "As if his stupidity were the teacher's fault! I am sure I've had enough of his Hannibal."

159. laeva in parte mamillae] i. e. in his heart. We should say, in his head. But the ancients placed the seat of reason in the heart.

160. Arcad. juv.] "this clod-hopping youth;" as Arcadia, from its inland situation, was a purely agricultural district. But perhaps the allusion is to the Arcadian asses, which were celebrated. Plaut. Asin. ii. 2. 67, "Meministin' asinos Arcadicos mercatori vendere Pellaeo nostrum atriensem;" and Persius, Sat. iii. 9, "Arcadiae pecuaria rudere credas."

161—164. Hannibal—cohortes] i. e. a declamation on the stock-theme of Hannibal's omitting to follow up his victory at Cannae.

163, 164. nimbos et fulmina] See Livy xxvi. 11, "Instructis utrinque exercitibus in ejus pugnae casum, in qua urbs Roma victori praeium esset, (Hannibal was then three miles only from the city,) imber ingens grandine mixtus utramque aciem turbavit . . . His motus ad Tutiam fluvium castra rettulit, sex millia passuum ab urbe."

165, 166.] "I'd give something, if his father had to listen to him as often." L. 165 lit. is, "name your security, and take my acceptance ('quod do') forthwith;" i. e. you shall have it. Where a security was given, the party who dictated the terms of it was said "stipulari;" the party accepting it 'spondere' or 'dare.'

167. Sophistae] Rhetoricians were called so at Athens. See Liddell and Scott's Greek Lexicon, σοφιστής, II.

168.] "And dropping the stock-villain, employ their rhetoric on a real case;" viz. the recovery of their fee. The seducer ("raptor"), like Paris or Jason, was a standing theme for declamations.

169, 170.] "While thus occupied, we hear nothing of Medea and Jason." "Fusa venena" are probably the poisoned robe sent by Medea to Creüsa. See Eurip. Medea, 784—789. 1136—1221. "Malus ingratusque maritus," i. e. Jason.

170. et quae—caecos] The well-known story of Pelias, the uncle of Jason. On the death of Aeson, Jason's father, Pelias usurped his kingdom of Iolcos. When Jason came to claim it, Pelias sent him on the expedition of the golden fleece. Jason returned in triumph accompanied by Medea, and the latter persuaded the daughters of Pelias to cut their father in pieces, and boil him in a caldron, as a means of restoring his youthful vigour. The experiment terminated as might have been expected.

Ergo sibi dabit ipse rudem, si nostra movebunt

171. dabit—rudem] See note on Sat. vi. 113.

173. pugnam] The "verae lites" of l. 168: i. e. the law-suit for his fee.

ib. descendit] "has to" . .

ib. umbra] "school;" so called perhaps, from the shade of the awning in front. Inferior rhetoric-classes were usually held in a 'pergula' (see note on Sat. xi. 136, 137), which would have required such a screen from the heat.

174.] "Or lose the wretched pittance which must pay for his day's dinner." "Tessera" is lit. "a counter." Here it means a 'corn-ticket,' not unlike our soup or coal-tickets. It entitled the bearer to receive corn at the monthly distribution ('frumentatio'), and probably had a certain market value. Hence "venit" here; "the sum for which a poor corn-ticket sells," i. e. which it will cost to buy one.

175. quippe—lautissima] "since this is your very highest fee." "Haec" is the "summula qua tessera venit."

ib. tenta] "just ascertain;" by way of contrast.

176. Chrysog.—Pollio] See Sat. vi. 74. 387. They were eminent 'citharoedi,' and music-masters.

177. artem—Theodori] i. e. rhetoric. Theodorus was a rhetorician in the time of Augustus. He was born at Gadara, in Syria, and lived principally at Rhodes, where he instructed Tiberius.

ib. scindens] "trenching upon his practice;" lit. "cutting it short." The word has also been rendered "depreciating" the art of Theodorus; as we should say, "cutting it up." But the sense first given is the best. Theodorus was settled for some time at Rome; see Suidas, Θεόδωρος Γαδάρων. So that the resort of pupils to the 'citharoedi' would have injured his practice.

178—187.] "Look too at the amount expended by the rich on personal indulgence; while for their children's education almost anything will suffice."

178. sexcentis] See note on Sat. i. 106.

ib. in qua] "up and down which." For the size of the porticoes of private houses at this period, see Hor. Od. ii. 15. 14—16. Formerly (he says), "nulla decempedis Metata privatis opacam Porticus excipiebat Arcton."

179. gestetur] "drive;" lit. 'be carried.'

179—181.] Ironical. "Would you have him wait till it clears, and then drive through the dragged streets? He must have his ride under cover, of course."

182—185.] Other indulgences. "Look at the luxurious dining-room ("coenatio") of the rich man. Again, costly as the house may have been, he must still have, in addition, his table-layer, and professed cook."

182. Numidarum] Cf. Hor. Od. ii. 18. 3, "columnas ultima recisas Africa."

183. algentem—solem] i. e. the winter sun. As the Roman houses were frequently without fire-places, it was as necessary to get the sun in winter, as to exclude it in summer. This was effected by giving the room different aspects.

184. Quanticumque] sub. 'constet': "stands him in."

184, 185. fercula—componit] "arranges." This was the office of the 'structor.' See note on Sat. v. 120.

186. Quintilianus] The famous rhetorician, who seems to have been moderately wealthy. See Maclean's Juvenal, ad loc.

187—202.] "You may ask, If this is all Quinilian gets, how is he so well off? Not from his profession, but because he was born under a lucky star; which makes the whole difference. Examine, for instance, the cases of success; they are all due to luck; Ventidius, Tullius, and all. Although, doubtless, such luck is rare enough."

189. novorum] Unprecedented. So Cic. Att. vi. 1, "quod video tibi novum accidisse."

190. transi] "go over;" i. e. examine. See Sat. iii. 114 and note. ib. felix—acer] "Felix" is subject; "pulcer et acer," predicates, with 'est' understood before them.

191, 192.] The construction is, "The man born to luck, being thereby both 'sapiens,' &c." "Subtextit lunam alutae," i. e. "fills the rank of senator." Senators wore a metal "C" on their boot ("aluta"). It was supposed to stand for 'centum,' the original number of the senate as instituted by Romulus.

193.] The construction returns to that of l. 190; "felix" being subject, and "orator" and "jaculator" predicates, with 'est' understood. "Jaculator" was a term in the rhetoric schools; "one who hurled arguments." Cf. Sat. vi. 449, 450.

194.] "Nay, even with a cold upon him, he is a first-rate singer." The passage is imitated from Hor. Ep. i. l. 106, 107, "Ad summam, sapiens uno minor est Jove, dives, Liber, honoratus, pulcer, rex denique regum."

ib. distat] "It makes all the difference."

195. sidera] "constellation." Like our "lucky star."

199. Ventidius] P. Ventidius Bassus. He was a native of Picenum, and taken prisoner by the Romans in the Social war; see note on Sat. v. 31. Hence the force of the word "captivis" in l. 201. Ventidius, who was still a youth, was brought to Rome, and for some years earned a livelihood as muledriver. See Virgil's parody on Catullus, "Sabinus ille, quem videtis, hospitius," &c. (Catalect. 8. n. Heyne.) He was afterwards taken up by Caesar, and eventually rose to be consul, B.C. 43. After this he was employed as Antony's legate against the Parthians, and triumphed B.C. 38: hence "triumphos," l. 201. His rise in life became proverbial.

ib. Tullius] The king Servius Tullius. See note on Sat. viii. 259. Hence "servis regna dabunt," l. 201.

199, 200. anne—fati] "They are nothing but instances of."

203 seqq.] "As an example, 'per contra,' look at Thrasy machus," &c.

204. Thrasy machi] A Greek sophist (see note on l. 167 above), and cotemporary of Gorgias. He is said to have hanged himself under the pressure of poverty; hence "exitus."

204, 205. Secundi Carrinatis] A rhetorician in Caligula's reign, who banished him for the freedom of his declamations.

205. hunc] This must be Carrinas, or some other recent teacher of rhetoric, whose story was familiar. There is no account, indeed, of Carrinas having retired to Athens and taken poison, but this is hardly an objection. It seems impossible that Socrates himself (see next note) should be the "hunc inopem;" unless we adopt the suggestion that a line has dropped out before this.

206. nil praeter—cicutas] i. e. no better entertainment than you gave Socrates. The death of Socrates is detailed in Plato's Phædo. As is well known, he was compelled to drink hemlock:—"magistrum—sorbitio tollit quem dira cicutas," Pers. Sat. iv. 1, 2. Socrates, like Carrinas, was a σοφιστής: see l. 167 and note.

207—214.] Another grievance of the rhetoric teacher; the insolence of his pupils.

207, 208. terram—crocos—ver] Sub. 'concedant.'

210—212.] Achilles was instructed in music and field sports by the centaur Cheiron, on Mount Pelion. Hence 'patriis in montibus,' Pelion being in Thessaly.

210, 211. Met. virgae—cant.] "learnt music, in wholesome terror of the rod."

211, 212.] "And yet his music-master's tail might have provoked a smile." See note on l. 210—212. The "citharoedi" is of course Cheiron.

213. Rufum] A rhetorician. Q. Curtius Rufus is mentioned by Suetonius, but it is not known whether this is the same.

214. Allobroga] "Gallic." The Allobroges were a people of S.E. Gaul, between the Rhone and the Ière. It probably means merely "barbarous," a charge which Rufus had apparently brought against Cicero's diction. But it has been thought also to refer to Sallust's imputation of his having put himself too much into the hands of the ambassadors of the Allobroges, during Catiline's conspiracy. See Sall. Cat. 41 seqq. If this is the true rendering, Rufus had probably selected the subject as the theme for a declamation.

216. Enceladi] A famous grammarian of the period. For "Palaemonis," see Sat. vi. 452 and note.

217. minus—aera] "less even than the rhetorician's fee, of which we have just spoken."

218, 219.] "The Παιδαγωγός and 'dispensator' both get their commission out of it." The Παιδαγωγός ("discipuli custos") attended the pupils to and from school, to prevent their falling into bad company. For 'dispensator,' see Sat. i. 91 and note. He had to pay the rhetoric-master, as part of the household expenses. "Acoenonoëtus" is a fictitious name, for which 'Acoenonetus' is another reading: i. e. ἀκοινώνητος instead of ἀκοινωότητος. The meaning, if the word is to have any, would be much the same, "uncommunicative;" that is, he keeps his gains to himself.

218. praemordet] "bites off from the end;" the strict force of the 'prae' in composition.

220—227.] "Sacrifice part, or you will get nothing at all for your exertions." The "aliquid" is the "commission." See last note.

220, 221. non aliter—caducui] "Like a shopman coming down in his price;" lit. "a mat and counterpane seller." The first meaning of "institor" is "agent"—"qui negotio

Institor hibernae tegetis niveique cadurci;— 221
 Dummodo non pereat, mediae quod noctis ab hora Sedisti, qua nemo faber, qua nemo sedebat,

 Flaccus, et haereret nigro fuligo Maroni.

 Non egeat. Sed vos saevas imponite leges, insistit." At Rome, where trade was considered discreditable, most of the shops were kept by slaves, as their masters' agents; and in this capacity they were termed "institores." So that the word usually means a shopkeeper or retail dealer. The shops were called 'tabernae,' and were on the ground floor of the large houses, by the side of the gateway, or entrance-hall. See Sat. i. 105—106; iii. 304. There were 'tabernae' also in the forum.

221. tegetis] For sleeping on. See Sat. v. 8, and note. For "cadurci," see Lat. Dict.

222. dummodo—quod] "that it may not be wholly lost labour, your having sat."

ib. mediae—n. ab hora] The Roman schools opened before day-break. See Mart. Ep. ix. 69. 1—4,

"Quid tibi nobiscum est, ludi accerlate magister, Invisum pueris virginibusque caput?"

Nondum cristati rupere silentia galli:

Murmure jam saevo verberibusque tonas."

223, 224. qua—qua] The antecedent is "hora," l. 222. "An hour at which no mechanic even was at work."

224. obliquo—ferro] i. e. "to card wool." The "obliquum ferrum" is the 'carmen,' or carding instrument.

225, 226. tot.—luc. quot—pueri]

Each scholar brought his own lamp. 226. decolor] With the "blacks" from the lamps.

227. Flaccus—Maroni] Horace and Virgil were by this time established as "school classica."

228, 229.] "And yet, small as the fee is, it is seldom paid until you have been to law for it."

228. cognitione] "cognizance." It was the technical term for the hearing of a cause.

ib. tribuni] Not the 'tribuni plebis,' who had no judicial functions, but the 'tribuni aerarii.' Originally, these were officers of the thirty plebeian tribes, for fiscal purposes, especially for collecting and paying the soldiers' pay ('stipendium'). By the 'Lex Aurelia' (B.C. 70), the 'judices' were chosen from the 'tribuni aerarii,' as well as from the senators and knights. Julius Caesar deprived them of their functions as 'judices,' but from the present passage they would seem to have been restored under the empire. For 'judices,' see note on Sat. iii. 213, "vadimonium;" also on l. 116, 117, above.

229. vos—imponite] l. 237, "exigite." "Go then, you parents, in spite of all this, and impose, as you do, your stern requirements; . . . exact from the teacher," &c. An indignant mode of expressing that this is what the parents do;—perhaps adopted, because the indicatives 'imponitis' and 'exigitis' would not scan.

230. ut—constet] "That the master shall have the theory of language well settled."

232. tamquam—suos] "at his fingers' ends."

233. thermas] "Assembly rooms." These were magnificent establishments for bathing and other purposes, erected under the empire in Rome, as well as in the principal watering places. They took their name from the warm baths, which formed a leading feature in the institution. In addition to these however, the thermae comprised gymnasia, libraries and rooms for recitation, large pleasure grounds, and porticoes adorned with paintings and statuary. See Sat. xi. 4. Agrippa had large thermae in the Campus Martius, which he bequeathed to the people, and the vestibule of these now forms the Pantheon. The 'balnea' differed from the 'thermae,' in being confined to bathing purposes only.

ib. Phoebi] Probably Nero's freedman.

234, 235. Nutricem Anchisae—novercae Anchemoli] There is no classical authority for either name, and probably never was for the former, although the Scholiast calls her Tisiphone. Servius (Virg. Aen. x. 389) states the "noverca" to have been called Casperia. Virgil (l. c.) only says, "Anchemolum, thalamos ausum incestare novercae."

235. quot—annos] Acestes in Virgil is always spoken of as aged. See Aen. v. 73, "aevi maturus Acestes," and "comites senioris Acestae," l. 301.

236. quot—urnas] See Virg. Aen. i. 195, "Vina, bonus quae deinde cadis onerarat Acestes." For "urnas," see note on Sat. vi. 426.

242. et—annus] See note on Sat. x. 115.

243. victori] in the Circensian games. See l. 114, and note.

Stemmata quid faciunt? quid prodest, Pontice, longo

Sanguine censeri, pictosque ostendere vultus
Majorum, et stantes in curribus Aemilianos, Et Curios jam dimidios, humeroque minorem
Corvinum, et Galbam auriculis nasoque carentem? 6
[Corvinum, posthac multa contingere virga]

1. stemmata] "pedigrees." Lit. "wreaths." In addition to the 'imagines' of their ancestors (see note on Sat. v. 110), the noble families had genealogical tables with portraits, and wreaths twined round them. Hence "generis tabula," l. 6. The word is thus equivalent to 'ancestry'; l. 1—11, and 18—22, amplifying the same idea. Gradually the word "stemma" came to be used for the table of descent itself.

2. censeri] A man's 'ordo' at Rome, as senator, eques, &c., depended on the amount of his 'census,' or property qualification. See note on Sat. v. 57. It was ascertained by the censor, and entered in a register which constituted the sole evidence of it. "Censeri," therefore, acquired the meaning of "to be classed," and hence simply, "to be." So that "longo sanguine censeri" is "to be of old blood."

ib. pictos—vultus] The reference now is to the 'imagines,' which were often painted. See on Sat. v. 110.

3. Aemil.—Cur.] Used for any noble families. "Aemilianos," i. e.

"Publius Cornelius Scipio Aemilianus Africanus Minor." He subdued Carthage in the third Punic war, and afterwards reduced Numantia by siege, B.C. 133; hence also called Numantinus. See l. 11. He was the son of L. Aemilius Paulus, the conqueror of Macedonia, and was adopted by a son of Scipio Africanus Major, the conqueror of Hannibal. For "Curios," see Sat. ii. 3, and note. "Corvinus" was the cognomen of the Valeria gens, from its founder the well-known M. Valerius Corvus. He was so called from his single combat with a Gaul while serving as military tribune under Camillus. A raven perched on the helmet of Valerius, and flew at the face of the Gaul, thus securing his antagonist the victory. "Galba," cognomen of the Sulpicia gens.

4. dimidios] Only half of them left. Sat. v. 84, and note; and see note on l. 19.

6. generis tabula] See note on l. 1 above.

7.] This line is undoubtedly spurious. If it had any meaning "multa virga" would be the "stemmata."

 See note on l. 1.

8, 9—11. Equit. — Dictat. mag. — Lepidis—Numantinos] i. e. their 'imagines.' See note on l. 3. Hence "fumosos."

11. Numantinos] See on l. 3, 4.

13. Allobrog.] Q. Fabius Maximus Allobrogicus. He took that name from his victory over the Allobroges, B.C. 121. The Fabius in the next line is his son, equally eminent for his profligacy. For "Allobroges," see note on Sat. vii. 214.

ib. Magna Ara] An altar of Hercules near the Forum Boarium, said to have been dedicated by Evander. The Fabia gens traced its descent from a child of Hercules by Vinduna, Evander's daughter.

15. mollior] "more effeminate."

ib. Euganea] From the Euganei in Cisalpine Gaul, near the Adige. So Hor. Od. iii. 16. 35, "pinguis Gallicis Crescunt vellera pascuis."

16. squalentes—avos] "his rough ancestors." Their 'imagines' look so by the side of his foppish descendant.

ib. traducit] Sat. ii. 159, and note.

18. frangenda—imagine] By the 'Lex Cornelia de Sicariis et veneficiis' (passed, B.C. 82) a poisoner, 'veneficus,' was punished with outlawry ('interdictio ignis et aquæ'). Under the empire, the punishment was 'deportatio in insulam.' See note on Sat. i. 73. Both classes of punishment deprived the offender of his "caput" or citizenship, so that his statue would naturally be removed from the family 'imagines.' The "emtor veneni," l. 16, is used as equivalent to 'veneficus.'

19. ceræ] The 'imagines' were commonly of this material, which may account for the dilapidations referred to l. 4, 5.

20.] "Virtus" is subject; "nobilitas," predicate.

21. Paulus—Cossus—Drusus] Cognomina of the Aemilian, Cornelian, and Livian families; used for any eminent men. "Be illustrious in character."

22, 23. hos—illi] scil. "mores."

22. pone—ante] "erect in front of." A similar metaphor to the more obvious "præcedant," l. 23.

23. virgas] i. e. the 'fasces.' See note on Sat. v. 110.

26, 27.] "If this be so, we will salute you by what illustrious name you will."

26. Gaetulice] i. e. Cossus Cornelius Lentulus. He took the agnomen of Gaetulicus from his victory over the Gaetuli in Africa, A.D. 6.

27. Silanus] Cognomen of the Julia gens.

29. populus] scil. of Egypt.

29, 30. Osiri invento] i. e. on the birth of "an Apis," who was supposed to be the soul of Osiris. The public rejoicings on this occasion are described by Herodotus, iii. 27, 28. The exclamation is said to have been εὐρήκαμεν ἀνυχαίρουμεν. The meaning of the lines is, "So rare is the union of merit with high birth, that we might cry εὐρήκαμεν over it."

32—38] "Nicknames, I need not tell you, often go by opposites. We call a man's dwarf Atlas, and so on. Take care that somebody does not call you a great man." Dwarfs were kept in rich families as a source of amusement.

33. pravam] "mis-shapen." "Extortam," lit. "dialocated;" i. e. all awry. There is an obvious distinction between the two epithets.

38. Creticus] Q. Cæcilius Metel-lus, who took this agnomen from his conquest of Crete, B.C. 67.

ib. Camerinus] This was a cognomen of the Sulpicia gens.

39. his] "In all this."

39, 40. Rubelli Blande] There are three difficulties in this passage. 1. The Rubellii were connected with Nero through Julia, ("quas sanguine fulget Iuli," l. 42,) the daughter of Drusus, and granddaughter of Tiberius. But Rubellius Blandus was her husband; her son (seq. l. 42, "ut te conciperet") was Rubellius Plautus. 2. Assuming the above difficulty disposed of by substituting "Plaute" for "Blande" in l. 40, a second arises on the chronology of the passage. Rubellius (Plautus) was banished, and eventually murdered by Nero, who was jealous of him as his probable successor. This was A.D. 62; while Juvenal was probably born A.D. 54, only eight years before. And yet Juvenal is clearly speaking of a contemporary (see "vivas," l. 46), and that a young man. 3. The arrogance here ascribed to Rubellius is quite inconsistent with his character in Tacitus, Ann. xiv. 22, "Habitu severo, casta et secreta domo, quan-

Feceris ipse aliquid, propter quod nobilis esses, 41
 Ut te conciperet, quae sanguine fulget Iuli,
 Non quae ventoso conducta sub aggere texit.
 Vos humiles, inquis, vulgi pars ultima nostri,
 Quorum nemo queat patriam monstrare parentis ;
 "Manner Ast ego Cecropides. Vivas, et originis hujus 46 makyth Gaudia longa feras ; tamen ima plebe Quiritem man." Facundum invenies : solet hic defendere causas Nobilis indocti. Veniet de plebe togata,
 Qui juris nodos et legum aenigmata solvat. 50
 Hic petit Euphraten juvenis domitique Batavi
 Custodes aquilas, armis industrius : at tu
 Nil nisi Cecropides, truncoque simillimus Hermae.
 Nullo quippe alio vincis discrimine, quam quod
 Illi marmoreum caput est, tua vivit imago. 55
 Dic mihi, Teucrorum proles, animalia muta toque metu occultior (this was to avoid exciting Nero's jealousy), tanto plus famae adeptus." The two latter difficulties seem wholly unexplained. It would dispose of all three if Juvenal's cotemporary was a son of Rubellius Plautus, bearing the same name as his grandfather Blandus. But there is no authority for this; and "te" in l. 42 must then mean, "him through whom you claim," i. e. "your father."

41. nobilis] In its strict sense, "well-born." The idea is thus amplified in l. 42, 43, the construction of which is in apposition with "nobilis esses," i. e. depending on "feceris" in l. 41.

42. quae—Iuli] i. e. Julia. See note on l. 39, 40.

43. non quae—texit] "and not one of the hired weavers on the 'agger.'" A household of repute always had its own loom, worked by the slaves. It was only those of mean condition who were obliged to "put out" the weaving, the pay for which was probably trifling enough. There were no manufacturing houses, as with us, except for the more costly fabrica. For "agger," see note on Sat. v. 153.

46. Cecropides] "Athenian," i. e. an αὐτόθους, like the Athenians,—"one of the aboriginal families." See Lidd. and Scott's Gr. Lex., αὐτόθους.

49. de plebe tog.] "from this city population." See note on Sat. iii. 172.

50. juris—legum] See note on Sat. ii. 43.

51. hic] "Another plebeian youth." For "Euphraten" and "Batavi," see Maclean ad loc. "Batavi" is gen. after "custodes," l. 52.

52. aquilas] i. e. the legions. See note on Sat. ii. 101.

53. trunco—Hermae] The ἑρμαῖ were the first rude conception of an image;—a square stone, shaped at the top into a bust, and therefore without hands or feet. This is of course the meaning here. The first images of this kind were probably those of Hermes (Mercury); but the name was retained even when the pedestal was surmounted by the busts of other deities.

56. Teucrorum] Rubellius, as belonging to the Julia gens, was in direct descent from Iulus (Ascanius). See Virg. Aen. i. 283, "Julius," a magno demissum nomen Iulo."

59. rauco] "hoarse with shouting." So that "palma" in l. 58 is probably "applause" (clapping hands).

ib. Circo] i. e. at the Circensian games. See note on Sat. iii. 223.

62, 63. Corythae—Hirpini] Names of racers; the latter also mentioned by Martial, Ep. iii. 63, "Hirpini ve-teres qui bene novit avos." Probably they are adjective forms from their respective birth-places, 'equae' and 'equi' being understood. "Corythae" might thus be another form for 'Corythaeae'; i. e., from Cortona in Etruria, in poetry 'Corythus.'
'Hirpini' would be from the country of the Hirpini in central Italy.

62. venale] sub. "est." "Go to the hammer."

65. umbrarum] i. e. of their deceased ancestors. "Ibi," l. 64, is "in their case."

69. titulis] See on Sat. v. 110.

70. illis—debes] i. e. your ancestors.

73. sensus communis] Literally this means, "a feeling in common with others." See Cic. Planc. 14, "Communis ille sensus in aliis for-tasse latuit; hic, quod cum caeteris sentiebat, id magis quam caeteri."

It is used, however, apart from any context, to express a particular quality in a person, and then means very much what we call "gentlemanly feeling." So Hor. Sat. i. 3. 64—66,
"ut forte legentem Aut tacitum impellat quovis sermone molestus; Communi sensu plane caret, inquit-mus." The truth is, that the phrase still keeps its strict meaning of "a feeling in common with others;"
i. e. unselfishness, viewed especially in its social results. Here the meaning is perhaps "forbearance." It has nothing to do with "common sense."

73, 74. in illa fortuna] In the position of Rubellius.

74—78.] "I would not have you rated only by your ancestor's merit without any of your own. The prop you rely on will give way under you." For "censeri," see note on
l. 2. "Tuorum," sub. 'avorum.'

79. tutor] "guardian," either to a minor ('pupillus'), or to a female possessed of property. In the former sense the word corresponded pretty well with that with which we are familiar, excepting that the 'tutela' terminated (in the case of males) at fourteen, when the 'toga virilis' was assumed. See note on Sat. i. 78. The 'tutela' of women was in some respects different, the management of the ward's property being left to herself, which was not the case with minors. The tutor's sanction, however, was required to all alienations of a woman's property, whether by will or during her life, as well as to her contracts and lawsuits. This sanction was technically termed 'auctoritas.'

ib. arbiter] "juror." An "arbiter," like a 'judex,' was appointed by the 'praetor.' See note on Sat. iii. 213. The functions of the two were indeed nearly identical, the difference lying in the forms of the pleadings, and also in the 'judicium' being constituted with a 'sponsio.' This was a penal sum, which the defendant promised to pay ('spondebat') if he failed, and which practically served as the provision for the plaintiff's costs. See Cic. pro P. Quintio throughout. The 'arbitrium' had no such provision. It will be seen from the above that the "arbiter" is not the same as our "arbitrator."

84. causas] All sufficient motives for.

85. dignus morte] The criminal. ib. perit] "really dies," i. e. lives a death in life. The word thus expands the idea of l. 84.

86. Gaurana] i. e. from the Lacus Lucrinus, near Baiæ. The 'Gaurus Mons' is the highest point of the hills which enclose the lake. The oysters of this district were famous. See Sat. iv. 141; xi. 49. And cf. Hor. Epod. 2. 49, "Non me Lacrina juerint conchyliæ."

ib. Cosmi] A famous dealer in unguents; also mentioned by Martial, Ep. iii. 55. 1, 2, "quacunque venis, Cosmum migrare putamus, Et fluere excusso cinnama fusa vitro."

ib. aeno] "crucible."

89. sociorum] See note on Sat. v. 31 ad fin.

90. regum] Native sovereigns under Roman protection.

Respice, quid moneant leges, quid curia mandet,
 Praemia quanta bonos maneant, quam fulmine justo Et Capito et Tutor ruerint, damnante senatu, Piratae Cilicum. (Sed quid damnatio confert,

 Multus ubique labor: raræ sine Mentore mensae.
 Inde Dolabella est atque hinc Antonius, inde 105

90. vacuis exsucta] By transposition for "vacua exsucta."

93. Capito] Capito Cossutianus. He was appointed to the province of Cilicia A.D. 56, and convicted of 'repetundæ' in his government. He had been an advocate, and notoriously mercenary in his practice.

ib. Tutor] It is not known who is meant; the reading is uncertain.

94—97.] "Although what do the provinces gain, even by the successful prosecution of a proconsul? He is followed by another just as bad. It would have been wiser to have saved the passage-money."

95. Pansa — Natta] It is not known who are referred to.

96. Chaerippe] A feigned name probably; some rich man of Cilicia, who had been subjected to exactions.

98.] "You see to what a deplorable state (98—112) the provinces are reduced. The only check, in fact, on proconsular oppression is the fear of resistance. The feeble provinces (112—115) will submit tamely enough, but there would be some risk (116—124) with the more warlike ones. Let your rule, however (125—142), be a higher one,— to justify your claim to noble birth by rectitude in administering your 'provincia.'" The passage makes it probable that Ponticus, to whom the satire is addressed, was expecting some proconsular appointment. Nothing, however, is known of him.

101. Spartana] i. e. purple-dyed. The 'murex' was found off the coast of Laconia. See Plin. Hist. Nat. ix. 36 init., "Præcipuus hic (murex) in . . . Laconica Europæ."

ib. conchyliæ Coa] "Coan dresses;" lit. shell-fish. The animal from which this dye is procured is thus used for the dyed material itself. Cos was famous for its manufacture of a light transparent dress. See Tibull. ii. 3. 55, "Illa gerat vestes tennes quas femina Coa Texuit."

102, 103. Myronis — Polycleiti] Both sculptors, and cotemporaries of Phidias. Myron was a Boeotian, Polycleitus a native of Argos.

104. Mentore] A Greek chaser of silver cups and vases. He flourished at a date previous to B.C. 356.

105. hinc — inde] i. e. from the ancient wealth of the provinces. It was this made them the plunderers they were.

Sacrilegus Verres. Referebant navibus altis Occulta spolia et plures de pace triumphos.
 Nunc sociis juga pauca boum et grex parvus equarum,

105. Dolabella—Antonius] C. Cornelius Dolabella was praetor in Cilicia B.C. 80. C. Antonius Hybrida was consul B.C. 63 (the year of Cicero's consulate), and afterwards appointed to Macedonia. Both Dolabella and Antonius were convicted of 'repetundae' in their province. Verres was praetor in Sicily B.C. 73—70. He is well known from Cicero's Verrine orations, which exhibit him as a monster of rapacity. The term "sacrilegus" is added, from the number of temples he plundered, beginning with Delos. See the Verrine Oration ii. l. 18, and the Oration Act. ii. 4, throughout.

107. occulta—triumphos] "Smuggled trophies, and twice-told triumphs of peace:—" occulta "agreeing with spolia." "Spolia" is contrasted with "occulta" by a strong irony. The trophies of these proconsuls were the plunder of the provinces, which they carried home with them, of course in strict secrecy. The "plures de pace triumphos" means "more than other generals have gained in war." By "triumphos" are meant the materials of a triumphal procession. The latter formed a brilliant cortège, laden with precious metals, jewels, works of art, and plunder of every description.

111. aedicula] "shrine;" dim. of 'aedes,' a temple.

114. resinata] "resin-daubed." This substance was used by the effeminate youth of the period to remove the hair from their bodies. Pumice-stone was employed for the same purpose; also tar. See Sat. ix. 14.

116. horrida] Opposed to "levia" in l. 115.

ib. axis] "clime," lit. pole (north or south). Cf. Sat. vi. 470.

117. latus] i. e. 'ora.'

ib. messoribus illis] the Cyrenians (the "Afros" of l. 120).

118. saturant] "feed." From the decline of agriculture under the empire, the greater part of the corn consumed in Rome was imported, principally from the provinces of Sicily and Cyrene. Hence "urbem Circo scenaeque vacantem;"—"feed Rome, and so leave it at leisure to enjoy its amusements."

ib. Circo] i. e. the Circensian games. See note on Sat. iii. 223; and cf. Sat. x. 81. "Scenae" the stage.

119, 120.] "Although, even if you were tempted to plunder Cyrene, what would you get by it, when Marius has just done that so effectually?" See note on Sat. i. 48.

120. tenues] "poor." The word is frequently used in this sense.

ib. discinxerit] "plundered;" lit. ungirdled. The 'zona' usually formed the purse: "Ibit eo quo vis, qui zonam perdidit." Hor. Ep. ii. 2. 40.

126. folium—Sibyllae] See Virg. Aen. iii. 445, "Quaecumque in foliis descripsit carmina virgo. Digerit in numerum." "Sententia" in l. 125 is "private judgment." The word often means "a rhetorical commonplace," and has been so rendered here. But it would have less force as opposed to the "verum folium Sibyllae."

127. cohors] The praetor's staff, either civil or military. So Hor. Sat. i. 7. 23, "laudat Brutum, laudatque cohortem." And so Ep. i. 8. 14, "Ut placeat juveni (Tiberio) percontare, utque cohorti." In this sense it has formed our "court." "Comitum" was frequently omitted.

ib. tribunal] See note on Sat. x. 35.

128. Acersecomes] Transl. "favourite."

129. conventus] Districts into which the provinces were divided for the administration of justice.

131. a Pico—genus] See Virg. Aen. vii. 45—49:

"—— Rex arva Latinus et urbes
Jam senior longa placidas in pace regebat.

Hunc Fauno et nympha genitum
Laurente Marica
Accipimus; Fauno Picus pater."

The meaning is, "be aboriginal."

132. omnem—pugnam] "the whole Titan army;" i. e. all who fought against Jove. The abstract is used for the concrete, 'pugnantes.'

133. Promethea] As the maker of the first man. See note on Sat. iv. 133.

136. virgas] See l. 23, and note.

142. quo] "to what end?"

ib. te] sub. "ut nobilem jactas."

ib. fals. sig. tab.] See Sat. i. 67, 68, and note.

145. Santonico] The Santones were in south-west Gaul, north of the Garonne. A coarse woollen cloth was manufactured there, and imported into Rome. Martial has the same phrase, Ep. xiv. 128.

146. praeter—cineres] See note on Sat. i. 171.

147. Damasippus] It is not known what consul is referred to. "Damasippus" is evidently a feigned name.

150. tempus honoris] "term of office."

153. jam senis] "although."

ib. virga—adnuet] A coachman's salute on the road.

155. lanatas] sub. "ovee."

156. caedit—altaria] i. e. in his magisterial capacity.

157. solam—pictas] Epona was the patron goddess of horses, and was often painted in stables.

158. pervigiles] The prefix has its full force: "open all night."

ib. instaurare popinas] "to revisit." This is an unusual sense of the word. Perhaps it is better to take "popinas" for the entertainment there, like the "restaurant epulas" of Virgil, Aen. vii. 146.

159. Syrophoenix] The Syrians in Rome would seem to have been frequently tavern-keepers. See Virg. "Copa," l. 1—3, "Copa Syrisca, caput Graia redimita mitella . . . Ebria fumosa saltat lasciva taberna." "Udus," "greasy with . . ."

160. Idumaeae (i. e. Judaicae). See Mart. Ep. ii. 2. 5, "Frater ('Titus) Idumaeos meruit cum patre triumphos." The arch of Titus is probably meant here.

161. Hospitis affectu] "with landlord's air." "Affectus" is "disposition," either real or assumed.

162. succincta] "bustling." See note on Sat. iv. 24. "Cyane" is the waitress at the tavern.

167. thermarum calices] Cups of the 'thermopolia.' These were shops for the sale of hot drinks. They are of course to be distinguished from the bathing establishments, also called 'thermae.' See note on Sat. vii.
233.

ib. inscriptaque lintea] The 'ther-mopolium' had probably a linen awning before it, with the proprie-tor's name and a tariff of prices inscribed.

169. bello, Armeniae, &c.] Datives after "maturus." The latter is opposed to the "juvenes" and "pueris," l. 164. 167, and the emphasis is on Damasippus. "He does this in mature life."

171. haec aetas] scil. "of Damasippus."

ib. Mitte Ostia] i. e. send him to embark. The Roman port Ostia is unquestionably meant here. See note on Sat. xii. 75—77. The plural form, instead of the more frequent Ostia, æ, is found in Livy, ix. 19, "Antio atque Ostiis tenuis." Under the Republic a fleet was stationed at Ostia for the protection of the coast; and it must have been the usual transport station for troops even after this object had ceased. From the "amnibus," "Rheno," "Istro," in the preceding line, it has been thought that Ostia means "their mouths."

This, however, would be feeble, unless some town there bore this name; but for this, although probable enough, there is no authority.

173. percussore] "cut-throat."

174. fugitivis] "runaway slaves."

175. carnifices] "public executioners for slaves." They inflicted torture or crucifixion, according to the offence. See note on Sat. vi. 219.

176. resupinati] "dead-drunk;"
lit. lying flat on his back. Hence the "cessantia tympana."

177, 178. lectus—cuiquam] No distinction of seats at table as in the "triclinium" of a gentleman's house. See note on Sat. v. 17. Cf. also Virg. Aen. i. 698, "mediamque se locavit."

180.] See note on Sat. vi. 151.

182. Volesos] The original name of the Valeria gens, from their ancestor Volesus, a Sabine.

186. siparium] i.e. the theatre;—the "aulaea" of Sat. vi. 67. See note there.

ib. Phasma Catulli] Nothing certain is known of this play, or of a dramatist Catullus. He is mentioned again Sat. xiii. 111.

ib. clamosum] "noisy."

187, 188.] The "Laureolus" was a play, in which a bandit of that name was represented as undergoing crucifixion. See note on Sat. vi. 219. The actor dexterously slipped on one side (hence 'velox Lentulus'), and a figure was attached to the cross in his place. Lentulus was both a writer and actor of 'mimi,' but nothing certain is known of him. His family, the Lentuli, were one of the most distinguished of the Cornelia gens; hence here "dignus vera cruce," as a patrician who turned 'histrio' became 'infamis.' See l. 196, 197, and note. The "vera crux" was on one occasion actually inflicted by Domitian, who compelled a criminal to play the part, and, of course, without being allowed to slip aside as the actors did. See Mart. de Spect. vii. 4, "Non falsa pendens in cruce Laureolus."

190. triscurria] See Lat. Dict.

191. planipedes] i. e. actors of mimes. They did not wear the 'soccus' (slipper) of regular comedy. See note on Sat. i. 3.

192. Mamercorum] The principal family in the Aemilia gens. For "alapas," see Lat. Dict. They would usually form the staple of pantomime.

192—200.] "As to the nobles who turn gladiators" (he has not before spoken of these in detail, but they are included in the 'pejora' of l. 184), "it matters nothing to them at what price they sell their lives" (lit. deaths). They do it, and that under no tyrant's compulsion. Not, of course, that any compulsion should force a man to a degrading act, even the minor degradation of the stage. But then there is imperial precedent for the latter, and the amphitheatre is the next step. Accordingly, now we have it." The above seems to be the sequence of thought, but the passage is loose both in structure and language.

192. vendant] This would of course be the result of indigence,

Quid refert? Vendunt nullo cogente Nerone,
 Nec dubitant celsi praetoris vendere ludis.
 Finge tamen gladios inde, atque hinc pulpita pone:

brought on by spendthrift habits. Cf. Sat. xi. 5—8.

193. nullo cogente Nerone] See Tacit. Ann. xiv. 14, "Notos quoque equites Romaes operas arenae promittere subegit donis ingentibus; nisi quod merces ab eo, qui iubere potest, vim necessitatis affert."

194. praetoris—ludis] See note on Sat. vii. 87. "Celsi," "sitting aloft." See the description, Sat. x. 36 seq.

195. pulpita] See note on Sat. iii. 154.

196, 197. mortem—Corinthi] The profession of actor ('histrio') was considered discreditable, and any free-born Roman who engaged in it became 'infamis,' and was liable to be excluded from his tribe. The 'histriones' accordingly were usually freedmen, slaves, or foreigners. This did not apply to the 'Atellanae,' which were always acted by free-born Romans. See note on Sat. i. 3.

197. Zelotypus] sub. "maritus." "Be (i. e. play the part of) Thymeles' jealous husband." For "Thymeles," see note on Sat. i. 36. "Corinthus" was another 'mimus' of the day.

198. citharoedo Principe] Nero performed on the stage at Naples several times, and also in Achaia. See l. 225, 226.

199, 200. illud dedecus] i. e. the patrician turned gladiator. "Habes," "one has."

200—208.] Gladiators were divided into classes, ordinarily distinguished by their arms. The least well-equipped was the 'retarius,' who carried only a three-pointed lance and net. The former was called 'tridens' or 'fusina.' See Sat. ii. 143. The latter was the 'rete,' from which the 'retarius' took his name. Cf. l. 204, "pendentia retia dextra," and "retia misit," Sat. ii. 148. The aim of the 'retarius' was to entangle his opponent with the net. If he failed in his first throw he fled ("tota fugit arena," l. 206), and tried to throw the net a second time, before his opponent could reach him. He was dressed only in a short tunic. See l. 207; and cf. Sat. ii. 143, "tunicati Gracchi." Opposed to the 'retarius,' and better armed, were usually the 'mirmillo,' 'Thrax,' and 'secutor.' All three of these formed a superior class. For the 'mirmillo,' see l. 200, and note on Sat. vi. 81. The 'Thrax' wore Thracian armour, with a short sword,—the "clypeo" and "falce supina" of l. 201, in which the 'Thrax' is described. The 'secutor' (l. 210), was so called from his chasing the 'retarius' round the arena if he had thrown his net unsuccessfully. See above. The name has also been derived from his taking the place of gladiators who had been put hors de combat; hence "jussus pugnare," l. 210. The meaning of the passage is therefore, "He does not even enter as a gladiator of a superior class, such as the 'mirmillo' or the 'Thrax' (l. 200, 201); he appears in the arena as a mere 'retarius.'" (l. 203—205). Cf. Sat. ii. 143—148 of the same Gracchus.

Nec clypeo Gracchum pugnantem, aut falce supina,

Nec galea frontem abscondit:) movet ecce tri-

205, 206. nequidquam effudit—fugit] See last note.

207, 208.] "We may trust that tunic (i. e. be sure who wears it) when the gold band stands off from the throat, and is tossed by the drooping falce hair." I. e. even were his face not visible, he would be betrayed by the patrician ornament of his retiarius's tunic. See note on l. 200—206 above. The ornament was a gold band round the neck, with long ends like a riband. For "galerus," see vi. 120.

209. ignominiam] In the strict sense of the term; the result of the "nota censoria." This was inflicted, among other offences, for appearing on a public stage. See note on Sat. iv. 12. The meaning is therefore, the real "ignominia" fell, not on Gracchus, to whom it would attach by law, but on the gladiator of mean extraction who had to fight with one so degraded.

210. secutor] See note on l. 200—208 above.

212. Senecam] See note on Sat. x. 16.

213, 214.] Parricides were sewn up in a sack ("culeus") with an ape, snake, dog, and cock, and thrown into the sea. By the 'Lex Pompeia de Parricidiis' (which extended the term to the murder of other relatives besides parents) Nero had committed three 'parricidia.' He murdered not only his mother Agrippina, but his aunt Domitia and brother (by-adoption) Britannicus. Hence "non una;" i. e. 'plures.' In strictness, indeed, although these two latter murders constituted, under the law above referred to, the crime of 'parricidium,' they were not liable to its specific punishment, the sewing in the sack. This was still confined to murderers of parents and grandparents.

215. Agamemnonidae] Orestes. 216—221.] "For Orestes ("ille," l. 216), although he slew his mother, had a divine sanction for it. Moreover he did not, like Nero, murder his other relations, nor did he appear on the stage, nor write bad poetry." Nero had done all this. See note on l. 198, 213, 214, above. The Tpwixá was a composition of Nero's, which he recited while Rome was burning. Tac. Ann. xv. 39.

The "in scena—scripsit" are of course an ἀποδόκιμον.

218, 219. Spartani—conjugii (for 'Spartanae conjugis'). Hermione, the daughter of Menelaus.

221, 222.] Rufus Verginius was governor of Upper Germany, Julius Vindex of Celtica, and Galba (afterwards the emperor) of Hispania Tarraconensis. They simultaneously revolted from Nero A.D. 68. Verginius was opposed to the pretensions of Vindex and Galba. On finding that the former was aspiring to the empire, Verginius marched against him, and defeated him in a pitched battle near Vesontio (Besançon). Vindex fell in this engagement, and the issue of the revolt seemed still uncertain. Meanwhile, however, a conspiracy had been organized in Rome itself against Nero, and Galba proclaimed there. Nero was wholly without defence, and to escape falling into the hands of the conspirators committed suicide at the house of his freedman Phaon near Rome.

222. magis] i.e. more than this public degradation of himself;—to explain l. 220, 221. "Bad as his murders were, this stage-mania was even worse."

223. quid] sub. "pejus."

225, 226. peregrina—Graiaequ] See note on l. 198 above.

226. apium] This was the victor's crown at the Nemean and Isthmian games.

227. majorum effigies] See note on Sat. v. 110; also the opening lines of this satire.

228. Domitii] i.e. the founder of your family. Nero belonged to the Ahenobarbi, a plebeian family in the Domitia gens. He was adopted by Claudius.

ib. tu] scil. Nero.

228, 229. Thyestae—Antigone—Melanippes] The characters you have acted. Thyestes and Antigone are well known. Melanippe was a daughter of Aeolus, and the subject of two plays of Euripides, of which only some fragments remain.

230. marmoreo—colosso] See l. 227 and reference.

232, 233. arma—parastis] The famous conspiracy of Catiline, Lentulus, and Cethegus, defeated by Cicero B.C. 63.

234.] i.e. as if you had been descendants of the Gauls who sacked Rome. Properly 'Gallia Braccata' was identical with 'Narbonensis,' the south-east district of Gaul. The term therefore is not strictly accurate here, as the tribes who migrated into Italy came from the centre and north-east of Gaul. See Arnold's Hist. Rome, i. 516. But the term is loosely used here for 'Gallorum' in general, so as to include 'Senonum.' "Children of the Gaul, descendants of the Senones themselves." The latter were probably the tribe who actually took Rome, the other tribes who had immigrated with them remaining in Northern Italy.

235. tunica—molesta] i.e. as incendiaries. See note on Sat. i. 155—157. Cf. Mart. Ep. x. 25. 5, "cum dicatur tunica praesente molesta Ure manum."

236. Consul] i.e. Cicero. See note on l. 232, 233.

237. Arpinas] Cicero was born at Arpinum, a town of the Volsci.

ib. novus—ignobilis] Because he was the first of the family who filled a curule office. Those whose ancestors had done this were the "nobiles;" those who first filled it themselves were "novi homines." Cf. notes on Sat. i. 100; v. 110.

ib. et—Eques] Cicero's family was of the equestrian order at Arpinum, and therefore, as Arpinum had acquired the complete Roman 'civitas,' at Rome also. His status, however, in the latter would of course only be that of a "municipalis (provincial) eques." See note on Sat. iii. 34, and Middleton's Life of Cicero, p. 2, note 4, 5; p. 3.

ib. modo] "lately."
 239. praesidium adtonitis (sub. "civibus") a guard over them. "Adtonitis," "stupor-struck." Cf. Sat. iv. 77. 146.

ib. in omni gente] See Cic. Cat. 2. 12 ad init., "Coloni omnes municipesque vestri, certiores a me facti de hac nocturna excursione Catilinae, facile urbes suas finesque defendent."

240. muros intra toga (see on xvi. 8)]. The conspiracy of Catiline was a 'tumultus' only, not a 'bellum.' Perhaps too the "muros intra" refers specially to the decree of the senate that Cicero should remain to guard the city while Antonius pursued the conspirators.

241. tituli] "monumental inscriptions." Cf. Sat. vi. 230; x. 143, 144. Or perhaps it is the inscription on the 'imagines,' as in Sat. i. 130; v. 110. See note on the latter.

ib. Leucade] i.e. at Actium. The island Leucas, on the Acarnanian coast, is used for the Acarnanian promontory Actium, off which the battle between Antony and Augustus was fought. The latter lay to the north-east of Leucas, at the entrance of the Ambracius Sinus.

242. Thessaliae campis] The battle of Philippi is meant. Philippi really is in Thracia.

244. Roma—dixit] This was soon after the destruction of Catiline. "Me Q. Catulus, princeps hujus ordinis et auctor publici consilii, frequentissimo senatu, parentem patriae nominavit," Cic. Pis. 3, init.

244. libera] Because the same title was afterwards applied to the emperors by way of adulation.

245. Arpinas alius] C. Marius, the well-known rival of Sulla. Like Cicero he was a native of Arpinum, or rather of Cereatae, a village near it. The great success in the life of Marius was his campaign against the Cimbri. See l. 249—253. They had destroyed the consular armies three years previously, and were descending on Italy through the Tyrol, while their allies, the Teutones, endeavoured to force a passage on the other side of the Alps by Nice and Genoa. Marius first defeated the Teutones, B.C. 102, at Aix (Aquae Sextiae). In the following year he marched against the Cimbri, who had succeeded in reaching Verceilae in the neighbourhood of Milan. Here Marius joined his army to that of the proconsul Catulus, and totally defeated the Cimbri at the Raudii Campi. The two tribes were annihilated by these defeats.

The civil war between Sulla and Marius broke out B.C. 88, but the army of the latter refused to act under him, and he was compelled to fly with a few attendants. After wandering in the marshes of the Liris, near Minturnae, Marius escaped on board ship, and took refuge in the ruins of Carthage. See Sat. x. 276, 277. In the following year a new revolution took place at Rome, and Marius, with the assistance of Cinna, entered the city as conqueror. On this occasion he made a merciless use of his success. He was now, however, worn out, and died in the year following, B.C. 86. Sulla had his ashes thrown into the Anio.

247, 248.] i. e. served as a common soldier.

247. vitem] sub. "centurionia." This was the centurion's badge of office, as well as a handy implement for enforcing discipline. Hence Marius, "frangebatur vertice vitem:"—would have it broken on his head. 'Vitis' is often used for the office itself. See Sat. xiv. 193.

253. collega] Catulus. See note on l. 245.

254. plebeiae] The Decii, although an ancient family, originally belonged to the 'plebs.' Cf. Hor. Sat. i. 6. 19, 20: "populus Laevino mallet honorem Quam Decio mandare novo." "Nomina" in l. 255 is perhaps an allusion to the family cognomen 'Mus.'

father, and his son of the same name. The former devoted himself to death in the Latin war, B.C. 340. A vision was seen by himself, and his colleague T. Manlius Torquatus, which announced that on one side the general was doomed, on the other the army. Decius accordingly determined to secure the victory to his country by his own death, and rushed into the thickest of the fight, where he was slain. The son performed a similar act of heroism in a battle against an allied force of Etruscans, Gauls, and others, B.C. 295. Decius saw that his troops were overmatched by the Gauls, to whom his division was opposed, and determined on imitating the self-sacrifice of his father. He accordingly, in a solemn form of prayer, devoted the enemy to the avenging manes of the dead, and then threw himself upon their swords.

255, 256. legionibus] The Roman army. "Auxiliis," the contingent of the allied states of Italy. See note on Sat. v. 31. "Pube Latina," the Latin portion of this contingent. See the same note.

259. Ancilla natus] The king Servius Tullius. His mother was Ocrisia, the wife of a noble in the Latin town of Corniculum. She was enceinte when the town was captured by Tarquinius Priscus, and was brought to Rome as his slave, where she gave birth to Servius Tullius. He gradually rose at court, as well as in popular estimation. On the assassination of Tarquin by the sons of Ancus, Tanaquil concealed her husband's death, and invested Servius with the functions of 'interrex.' Eventually he succeeded to the throne, and founded the first popular institution of Rome, the 'comitia centuriata,' by which the 'plebs' were admitted to a share of power. Hence he is here called "regum ultimus ille bonorum." The second Tarquin abolished the Servian constitution shortly after his accession.

ib. trabeam] This was part of the royal costume,—a white toga with purple stripes. So king Latinus is "Quirinali trabea insignis." Virg. Aen. vii. 612. After the expulsion of the kings, its use was continued by the consuls, and also by the equites, at some public solemnities. It was again assumed by the emperors, who however wore it entirely of purple; hence the common phrase, "the imperial purple."

260. fasces] See note on Sat. v. 110.

261—268.] The story is well known from Livy, 2. 4, 5. The sons of Brutus took the lead in a conspiracy to restore the Tarquins. The plot was discovered by a slave (l. 264) who informed the consuls, and Brutus ordered his sons to be beheaded.

261. laxabant] The proper imperfect force. "Were opening;" i. e. endeavoured to do so.

263. magnum aliquid] sub. "ausos esse."

264, 265.] The stories of Horatius

Imperii fines Tiberinum virgo natavit. 265
 Occulta ad Patres produxit crimina servus
 Matronis lugendus: at illos verbera iustis Afficiunt poenis, et legum prima securis.

tius Cocles, Mucius, and Clælia.
 See Livy, 2. 10. 12, 13.

265. imperii fines Tiberinum] Contrasted, in Juvenal's characteristic manner, with its present extent. The line has been supposed to refer to the Transtiberine land claimed by the Veientes, and for the restoration of which Porcena stipulated. See Livy, 2. 13. But this would have little force.

267. matronis] "by mothers to all time."

268. legum prima securis] "The first axe that fell at the law's bidding." It is opposed to the arbitrary executions during the regal period.

269. Vulcania—capessas] Patroclus had worn the arms of Achilles, and on his death under the walls of Troy, they were captured by Hector. Thetis accordingly paid a visit to Vulcan at his workshop, and procured her son a new set of armour. See Hom. II. xviii. 369—xix. 18.

272. revolvās] See note on Sat. i. 5, 6. "Ut longe," "however far back."

273. asylo] "Deinde, ne vana urbis magnitudo esset (Romulus) . . . locum qui nunc septus descenditibus inter duos lucos est, asyllum aperit. Eo ex finitimis populis turba omnis sine discrimine liber an servus esset, avida novarum rerum perfugit." Livy, i. 8. Cf. Virg. Aen. viii. 342, 343, "lucum ingentem, quem Romulus acer Asylum Retulit."

275. aut—nolo] "Was either a shepherd, or something worse;" i. e. a refugee at the asylum. See last note. The shepherds of the district were the first followers of Romulus and Remus. See Livy, i. 4, "pastoribus rapta dividere . . . crescente in dies grege juvenum." The reticence in the "aliud quod dicere nolo" resembles that of the familiar phrase for 'fur'; 'homo trium literarum.'

JUV. Scire velim, quare toties mihi, Naevole, tristis

Occurras, fronte obducta, ceu Marsya victus.
Non erat hac facie miserabilior Crepereius Pollio, qui, triplicem usuram praestare paratus, Circuit, et fatuos non invenit. Unde repente
Tot rugae? Certe modico contentus, agebas Vernam equitem, conviva joco mordente facetus, 10
Et salibus vehemens intra pomoeria natis.

6, 7. Crepereius Pollio] Some spendthrift of the day.

7. triplicem usurum] "36 per cent." Lit. it is "thrice the usual interest." The latter was paid on the first of every month, and termed "asses usurae;" i. e. one 'as' per hundred per month, and therefore 12 'asses' per hundred in the twelve-month, or our "twelve per cent." The ordinary term for the 'asses usurae' was 'centesima;' as at the above rate, an amount equal to the principal was paid in 100 months.

8. fatuos non invenit] "finds no fools to lend him the money."

9. agebas] "played the part of;" i. e. went as gay as.

10. vernam equitem] The 'vernae,' or slaves born in the house, were indulgently treated and impudent in proportion. See Hor. Epod. 2. 66, "Positosque vernas, ditis examen domus, Circum renidentes Lares." Cf. Sat. ii. 6. 66, "vernasque procaces Pasco libatis dapibus." Hence the term became synonymous with 'scurra,' a buffoon or parasite, in which sense it is used here. He was had out to dinner for the sake of his jests. Pollio appears to have been of an equestrian family.

11. salibus—natis] "bon-mots of the town." At Rome, as in the cities founded from it, there were two lines of inclosure; the 'agger' and the 'pomoerium.' The former was an earthwork raised for the military defence of the city. The 'pomoerium,' on the other hand, existed in theory only, and formed the religious boundary, within which alone the auspices could be taken previously to a general assuming the 'imperium.' See note on Sat. vi. 400.

The course of the 'pomoerium' was marked by stones, like our parish bounds, and no building was permitted within a certain distance on each side of it. Its line was ascertained in the first instance by ploughing round the city with a bullock and heifer yoked, and taking care that the sods fell inwards. The ridge thus formed was the 'murus;' and an imaginary line running behind it was the 'post murum,' contracted into 'pomoerium.' The object of adopting the inner line for the boundary instead of the 'murus' itself, was probably the same as that for which the Jewish criminal courts inflicted only the "forty stripes save one," instead of the forty prescribed by Deut. xxv. 3; viz. to avoid any accidental infringement of the limit.

The 'pomoerium' was from time to time extended with the growth of the city. There was no necessity indeed for this being done, as the 'agger' was never required to be identical with it, and there was no restriction on building outside the 'pomoerium,' at a certain distance. It became the practice however; and eventually the 'pomoerium' comprised the greater part of ancient Rome. The Aventine was not included until the reign of Claudius, probably owing to the sinister augury taken there by Remus. No one was competent to extend the 'pomoerium' unless he had increased the Roman territory by conquest.

14. fascia] bandage. Cf. Sat. vi. 263, and note.

ib. visci] tar; used to remove hair from the body. Pumice-stone was usually employed for this purpose, as also resin. Sat. viii. 114.

17. quarta dies—febris] i. e. (by hendiadys) "a quartan fever." "Olim domestica." chronic; lit. long since domesticated.

29. munimenta] scil. against the weather.

31. tenue—secundae] A piece of thin plate of inferior quality. So "vena" (metaphoricè), Sat. vii. 53.

54. passer] transl. "effeminate." It is addressed to the patron.

55. tot—lassos] The property was so extensive, that they got tired in flying over it. For "Appula" cf. Hor. Od. iii. 16. 26, "quicquid arat impiger Appulus." The sea-board of Southern Apulia was remarkable for its fertility.

56. Trifolinus ager] This is said to have been near Naples. The "vina Trifolina" are mentioned also by Plin., who couples them with "plebeia." See Hist. Nat. xiv. 6. See also Mart. Ep. xiii. 114, "Non sum de primo, fateor, Trifolina Lyaeo" (sub. 'vitis'). The derivation of "trifolinus" from wine that ripens in three years (after the "third new leaf") seems fanciful.

57. suspectum jugum Cumis] "looked up to by." The promontory of Misenum is meant. Lucullus had a famous villa there, which afterwards became the property of Tiberius. For Gaurus see note on Sat. viii. 86. "Inanis" is "stripped for you of its vintage." Unless the word means "hollow," and refers to the evidently volcanic origin of the mountain.

58. victuro] "long-lived," i. e.

that will bear keeping.

59. lumbos donare] transl. "re-cruit the energies."

60—62.] "Is it well that your farmer's child here, with mother, cottages, and playmate dog, should fall as a legacy to your friend the cymbal player, instead of myself?" The ordinary detail of a farm-scene is used instead of the farm itself. The "cymbala pulsantis amici" is "the Gallus." See note on Sat. ii. 111. For "casulis" cf. Sat. xi. 153; xiv. 167. 179.

63. pensio] "rent-(day)."

64, 65. puer—acies] "My one slave, dear to me as Polyphemus' one eye to him."
 65. per quam] "by putting out which."

69. cicadas] i. e. the summer.

98. valvis] my doors, i. e. set my house on fire.

100. his—veneni] "With his (the patron's) wealth, poison comes cheap." "Annona alicujus rei cara . . vilis est" is a frequent idiom. It means "the market," i. e. (market-price) "of it is high or low." Cf. Hor. Ep. i. 12. 24, "Vilis amicorum est annona, bonis ubi quid deest."

101. curia Martis] The Areopagus; so called because Ares was there brought to trial by Poseidon for the murder of his son Halirrhothius. "Ἀρειοπαγίτου στεγανώτατος" was a Greek proverb: see Hesych. στεγανώτατον, and note. It arose from their sitting with closed doors, and being sworn to secrecy.

103. ut] "even though."

106. clamant omnes] "Still each and every of these" (scil. "fenestras, rimas, ostia") "find a voice."

107. ad—secundi] At day-break. The first cock-crowing was at midnight.

108. caupo] "eating-house keeper," and therefore also his guests.

108—110. audiet—carptores] "In fact, not only will he know what has occurred, but a great deal which hasn't;" mere inventions of the slaves. "Librarius," the "secretary." "Archimagirus," "head-cook." "Carptor," "carver." The functions of the latter, in Sat. v. 120, and xi. 136, are given to the "structor," or arranger of dishes.

112. baltea] The leather "balteus" (or "balteum") would be a handy implement for chastising the slaves.

112, 113.] "Or there will be some drunken slave, who will fasten upon a man, and tell all about it." "Inebriet," stupify with his talking. "Te:" not addressed to Naevolus, but used generally for any passer-by.

114. Illos] the slaves.

114, 115. quidquid—a nobis] i. e. the request in l. 93, 94.

117. Laufella] some drunken priestess. "Saufeia" is another reading.

ib. faciens] Like the Greek ποιεῖν or ποιέειν. "Sacrificing."

121, 122.] "Although, bad as the slaves may be, the master, who thus lives in servitude to them, is worse." "Illis," i. e. "ab illis;" as "liber metu, cura." "Illis—aere" is of course a periphrasis for "his slaves."

124. modo] "just now."

137. nostrique] opp. to the patron's house.

139. figam] "make sure of;" lit. strike down, like an animal of chase.

140. tegete] See Sat. v. 8, and note. "Baculo," the mendicant's staff.

140, 141. viginti—positis] "twenty thousand sesterces income" (lit. interest) "on good security." See note on Sat. i. 106, and on l. 7 of this Satire.

141. puri] 'plain,' as in Sat. x. 19. It is opposed to 'argentum asperum' (Sat. xiv. 62);—plate chased or embossed.

142. Fabricius censor] This was the famous Luscinius C. Fabricius, who commanded in the war against Pyrrhus. In his censorship, B.C. 275, he expelled from the senate P. Cornelius Rufinus, for possessing ten pounds of silver-plate. "Notet," in this line, was the technical term for this; see note on Sat. iv. 12. In aftertimes Fabricius was spoken of as the type of the old republican character.

142—144.] "Two strong slaves to carry my litter to the Circus."

The slaves are "Moesians" here, as "Liburnians" Sat. iii. 240, and "Medians" Sat. vii. 132.

143. locata] adjusted to the poles of the litter.

144. clamoso—Circo] So "rauco," Sat. viii. 59. See note there.

145, 146. caelator—alter, qui—pingat] In addition to the usual domestic offices, slaves at Rome were employed as artisans and mechanics, like domestic servants in India. In wealthy families, they also practised some departments of art, as painting and silver-chasing.

ib. curvus] with being kept at

146, 147. sufficiens—ero] Of course ironical. The establishment he stipulates for is a fairly luxurious one.

148. saltem] "even." "His" is for "horum," unless "frui" is understood.

149, 150. illa—nave] that of Ulysses. See Hom. Od. xii. 165—177. For "ceras" see l. 173 seqq. ἰγὼ κηροῖο μέγαν τροχὸν ὀξεῖ χαλκῷ Τυτθὰ διατμήξας χερσὶ στιβαρῇσι πιττεύω . . . ἰξείης δ' ἰτάρουσιν ἐπ' οὐατα πᾶσιν ἄλειψα.

4. ratione] "according to reason."

5, 6. quid—peracti] "What petition do you ever frame so auspiciously, that you have not to repent of your act, and offered vow?" "Concipere" and "peragere" are the technical terms for a set form of prayer. "Dextro pede" is unusual, except with verbs of motion, but was perhaps suggested by Virgil's "dexter adi pede sacra secundo," Aen. viii. 302.

7. optantibus ipsis] "at their own request;" i. e. by granting what they ask . . .

8. toga] Note on Sat. xvi. 8.

10. ille] Probably Milon, the famous athlete of Crotona. His strength was immense, and led to his death, by his attempting, in old age, to force asunder the partially-cleft trunk of a tree. It closed upon him, and wedged him in, until he was devoured by wolves. Milon flourished B.C. 511.

13. census] See note on Sat. i. 60.

14. Britannica] i. e. of the North Sea.

Claudius and Nero. He was exiled by the latter, on account of the influence he had acquired by his large fortune. Longinus was recalled from banishment by Vespasian.

ib. Senecae] The well-known philosopher and dramatist, put to death by Nero, who had been his pupil. His wealth was enormous, and no doubt contributed to his fate. The immediate cause, however, was a charge of his having been concerned in Piso's unsuccessful conspiracy against Nero, A.D. 65. Seneca was allowed to open his own veins, and his wife Paullina did the same. The philosopher's blood flowed slowly, and his torture was extreme. After taking hemlock ineffectually, he entered a bath to accelerate his death, and was finally suffocated in a vapour-stove. Paullina recovered.

17. Lateranorum] Plautius Lateranus joined in the unsuccessful conspiracy against Nero, A.D. 65, and was executed by that emperor's order.

18. coenacula] Note on Sat. vii. 118, 'scalarum.'

19. puri argenti] See note on Sat. ix. 141.

25. nostra — foro] The "arca" (strong-box) would be that of the bankers, or 'argentarii.' Their place of business was in the porticoes which surrounded the forum.

26. fictilibus] sub. "vasibus."

27. Setinum] See note on Sat. v. 34.

28. jamne igitur] "Do you not then?" . . .

28—30. alter — alter] Democritus is the well-known philosopher of Abdera (born B.C. 460), and Heracleitus, an Ephesian philosopher, who flourished about B.C. 513. Democritus took as cheerful a view of human errors as Heracleitus did the reverse. Hence the former became proverbial as the "laughing," the latter as the "crying," philosopher.

31, 32.] "Not indeed that the former was surprising. The satire of a laugh was easy enough; but it is wonderful where Heracleitus could have found his tears." "Rigidi," "reproving."

35. praetexta — trabeae — lectica] See notes on Sat. i. 78; viii. 259; and i. 32.

ib. tribunal] The praetor's seat for administering justice. See note on Sat. iii. 213. It was erected at one end of the 'basilica,' or 'law-court.' There were several of these 'basilicae' in Rome, and their size was considerable. On the establishment of Christianity the 'basilicae' were mostly converted into churches, the altar being placed where the 'tribunal' previously stood.

36—46.] "What would he have said if he had seen the praetor presiding at the Circensian games?" See note on Sat. iii. 223; vii. 87. The praetor rode in procession to the Circus Maximus, and afterwards presided at the chariot races. See note on Sat. iii. 223. The description here (from "praecedentia," l. 44) seems to apply to the former part of the ceremony, viz. the procession. In Sat. xi. 191—193 it is probably the races at which the praetor is presiding.

38. tunica Jovis] This was kept in the Capitol, and used only on state occasions.

ib. Sarrana] i.e. Tyrian. "Sarra" was the ancient name of Tyre.

39. aulaea togae] "curtains of his toga," which was probably of great size. "Aulaea" means usually the 'siparium' in the theatre. See Sat. viii. 186, and note. The term, however, is also used for hangings in a private house. They caused the accident at the dinner of Nasidienus, Hor. Sat. ii. 8. 54, "Interea suspensa graves aulaea ruinas In patinam fecere."

41. tenet] Above the praetor's head.

41, 42. publicus—servus] A large body of slaves belonged to the state, and were hence called "publici servi;" as 'publicus ager' means the state lands. They were employed in the care of the public buildings, as attendants on the magistrates (and priests), executioners, and jailors, and in similar capacities. These "publici servi" were better treated than those who were in the hands of private proprietors.

41. Consul] i.e. the praetor. The terms were originally identical.

50. vercum—nasci] i. e. even at Abdera, the natives of which were notoriously dull. See Mart. Ep. x. 25. 4, "Abderitanæ pectora plebis habes." "Vercum in patria" is used because Thrace, in which Abdera was situated, was principally a pastoral country, its hilly character adapting it for sheep-walks. There is of course, too, a reference to the stupidity of a wether; cf. our "mutton-head."

53. mandaret laqueum] "Bade her go and be hanged."

ib. mediumque — unguem] i. e. 'digitum.' To point the middle finger ("infamis digitus," Pers. ii. 33) was a mode of insult.

55. genua incerare deorum] Votaries wrote out their prayers, and hung them on the knees of the images. "Incerare" is used because the writing was on waxen tablets. See note on Sat. i. 63.

58. pagina] The scroll containing the 'tituli' of the ancestral 'imagines.' See note on Sat. v. 110.

59, 60. bigarum—caballis] The triumphal chariot and horses on which the statue was seated.

63. Sejanus] The minister of Tiberius, over whom he had acquired a complete ascendancy. During the time Sejanus was in power, his favour at court, and influence in all departments of the state, made his position that of an eastern vizier. This was especially the case after he obtained the command of the Prætorian guard, whom he quartered in one body just outside the city, and thus kept it in military terror. See note on l. 94, 95 post.

After some years, Tiberius began to suspect that his minister was aiming at the supreme power himself, and determined on his ruin accordingly. Sejanus was amused by promises of marrying Livia (the sister of Germanicus), and being elevated to the joint tribunate with the emperor, both of which had formed part of his schemes. When the time appeared ripe for striking a blow, Macro was sent to Rome for that purpose, the emperor himself remaining in his retirement at Capreae; see l. 71, 73. Macro deprived Sejanus of his command, and at the same time produced to the senate a letter, which, although obscurely worded, implied that Tiberius wished to be protected from his minister. See l. 71, 72; and cf. l. 84, 85, "poenas exigat . . . Ut male defensus." The intimation was acted upon; Sejanus was exe-

74. Tusco] "her Tuscan;" i. e. Sejanus. "Nursia" was an Etruscan goddess, and had a temple at Volsinii, where Sejanus was born. See Livy vii. 3, "Volsiniis quoque clavos indices numeri annorum fixos in templo Nortiae Etruscae Deae comparere . . . Cincius affirmat."

76. hac ipsa] "that very;" i. e. the moment he had dispatched Tiberius. "Diceret Augustum:" "would have proclaimed him emperor." Augustus was an usual imperial title. Cf. Sat. vi. 118.

80. duas res optat] "has but two wants."

81. panem] There is no reason for supposing that this refers to the public distribution mentioned in the note to Sat. vii. 174. It is merely specified as a necessary of life, and so humorously coupled with "Circenses."

ib. Circenses] sub. "ludos." See note on Sat. iii. 223.

ib. perituros] Be put to death with Sejanus.

81—88. perituros—trahat] A dialogue between two citizens.

82. magna est fornacula] "that oven will bake more than one loaf;" i.e. his fall will involve that of others.

83. Brutidius] Probably Brutidius Niger, who had been aedile A.D. 22.

84, 85. victus—defensus] "Lest this worsted Ajax may make us suffer, as though his interests had been ill-protected;"—"victus" and "defensus" (i.e. by his counsel) being properly used of a worsted litigant. This refers to the letter of Tiberius, in which he intimated his wish to be protected against Sejanus. See on l. 63. The speaker fears the emperor may avenge himself on the citizens, as Ajax did on the sheep in the Greek camp. The story is well known from the tragedy of Sophocles; see Aj. 296—303.

86. in ripa] See note on l. 63.

87, 88.] "But be sure that our slaves see us do it, lest some one of them deny the fact, and accuse us." Political charges were constantly brought by slaves against their masters, who lived in much dread of them on this account.

88. hi] "the above are."

91. sellas—curules] i.e. a curule magistracy. See note on Sat. v. 110.

93. cum grege Chaldaeo] Tiberius was addicted to astrology, which he had studied under Thraeyllus at Rhodes; he predicted that Galba would be emperor. "Et tu, Galba, quandoque degustabis imperium," Tac. Ann. 6. 20 fin.

94, 95. vis certè—domestica] "Certainly you would like to have at your disposal the 'primipilatus' and command of cohorts, the select knights, and the home-camp." In other words, "You would like to have the army entirely under your command." This would of course be a chief engine of power to an ambitious man, and as such Sejanus had used it. See note on l. 63 above. That this is the general meaning of the passage it seems impossible to doubt. The usual explanation given is, "you would like to receive these appointments yourself." But this does not agree with the context; besides which, "vis egregios equites" could not, by any violence of construction, be taken to mean, "you would wish to be an 'egregius eques' yourself." It is clear, therefore, that the meaning is not "preferment," but "patronage." On the other hand, it seems also clear that the patronage here referred to is confined to military appointments. Its possession is also viewed not in the aspect familiar to us, but as a means of acquiring absolute power in the state; such as the command of a military force quartered in the capital cannot fail to give. See l. 96, 97, "Et qui nolunt occidere quemquam Posse volunt." See also the earlier part of this note, and note on l. 63 above.

Haec cupias?—Et qui nolunt occidere quemquam, Posse volunt. Sed quae praeclara et prospera tanti,

Assuming, therefore, the above as the general meaning of the passage, the explanation of the particular terms used will be as follows:—

(1) "Pila." The 'primipilatus' is meant. 'Primipilus' was the name given under the Republic to the first centurion of the first maniple of the 'triarii.' The Roman army was at that time arranged in three lines. The 'hastati' and 'principes' formed the two front lines, and the 'triarii' the third. The latter were a reserve of veteran soldiers, each of whom carried two 'pila' or javelins, leading to the name 'primipilus' above, and to the use of 'pila' here for the appointment itself. For the same reason the 'hastati' and 'principes,' who formed the two front lines, were collectively termed 'antepilani.'

In the decline of the Republic this arrangement fell into disuse, and the legions were divided into ten cohorts, each containing three maniples, and each maniple containing two centuries. The entire legion, therefore, now consisted of thirty maniples and sixty centuries. The name 'primipilus,' however, was still retained, and was applied perhaps to the first centurion of the first cohort, or 'cohortis milliaria.'

The 'primipilus,' both under the Republic and Empire, had charge of the eagle of the legion. See Sat. xiv. 197, and note on Sat. ii. 101. He was also an ex officio member of the general's council; and retired 'primipili' had a rank, that of 'primipilaris,' just as those who had served the office of consul ranked as 'consulares.' From the lucrative character of the appointment it is called (Sat. xiv. 197) "locupletem aequilam."

It should be observed that 'primus pilus' was properly the first maniple of the 'triarii' itself. So that 'primipilus' is really an inaccurate expression for 'primipili centurio.'

(2) "Cohortes." The appointment of 'praefectus cohortis' is meant. See note on Sat. vii. 92.

The above terms, "pila" and "cohortes," refer, it will be seen, to military appointments. In those which follow in l. 95, the "egregios equites" and "castra domestica," the sense rather changes, and the meaning is, "you would like to have these bodies subservient to you." The same English verb will, however, serve for both lines,—"have the disposal of."

(3) "Egregios equites." "The select knights." This is usually taken to mean the 'illustres (or 'splendidi') equites' of Tac. Ann. xv. 4; see the note of Lipsius there. This, however, can hardly be correct. It is clear that the present passage refers exclusively to military appointments, while these 'illustres equites' were a purely civil body, and eligible to no office in the army. Indeed it may be doubted whether, at the date of this Satire, they had not ceased to exist as a distinct class. The "equites" here meant are, it is submitted, the 'equites equo publico,' or strictly military knights. This latter class had been restored some years previously, and the army was now mainly officered from them; see Suet. Claud. 25. It is, perhaps, an allowable conjecture that they had at this date succeeded also to the name of 'illustres equites,' with which 'egregii' here would be identical.

Ut rebus laetis par sit mensura malorum?
Hujus, qui trahitur, praetextam sumere mavis,

A few words should be added as to this application of the term 'equites' to two distinct bodies, one military and the other civil. The former was the original meaning, the 'equites' being at first, as the name implies, merely the cavalry of the Roman army. In the Servian constitution they formed the eighteen "equestrian centuries," and were provided with a horse at the public expense; hence called 'equites equo publico.' During the siege of Veii, however, a change took place in this latter respect, and, in addition to the 'equites equo publico,' the centuries now comprised other knights, who served with their own horses. Later in the Republic a still further change took place. The 'equites,' although still existing in name, no longer served with the army, the cavalry being drawn exclusively from the contingent furnished by the allied states. Under the empire, however, as above noticed, this was again reversed. The 'equites equo publico' were now restored to actual service, and formed a highly honourable body in the state, from which the officers of the 'cohortes' and 'alae,' and the military tribunes, were chosen, as well as the principal magistrates.

The application of the term 'equites' to a purely civil body commenced during the period above referred to, when the military service of the knights was in abeyance. By the Lex Sempronia, B.C. 123, a new order in the state was created, comprising all those who had a census of 400 sester tia, without reference to any other qualification. See note on Sat. iii. 154. This was the well-known 'equestris ordo,' and in popular language soon became termed the 'equites,' to the exclusion for the time of the proper meaning of the word;—thus in Cicero throughout. For many years the 'equestris ordo,' or civil 'equites,' formed a highly influential body in the state. By the Lex Sempronia the 'judices' were chosen from them (see note on Sat. iii. 213; vii. 116); and after the alteration made in this respect by Sulla and the Lex Aurelia, B.C. 70, their position was still maintained by the 'publicani,' or farmers of the public taxes, who were usually 'equites.' The Lex Roacia Othonis assigning them the first fourteen seats in the theatre behind the orchestra, has been already noticed. See note on Sat. iii. 154. By degrees, however, the order became lowered by the admission of persons possessed of the required fortune, but of obscure birth; see Sat. iii. 154—159. Augustus endeavoured to restore it by the formation of the élite class above referred to, the 'illustres' or 'splendidissimi equites.' This was an upper class within the 'ordo,' composed of those who had a senatorial fortune, and whom Augustus, therefore, allowed to wear the 'laticlave,' which was the distinctive badge of the senate. Hence they are also called 'equites laticlavii.' The attempt, however, seems to have wholly failed, and under the later empire the 'equites,' as a civil body, sank into complete insignificance.

(4) The 'castra domestica,' i.e. the Praetorian guard. Originally this consisted of one cohort only, and formed the body-guard of the consul or praetor (the terms being then identical) when on actual service. It was accordingly termed the 'praetoria cohors.' Augustus increased the number of cohorts in the guard to nine, and formed them into a separate force, part of which was always stationed in the capital. By the advice of Sejanus, Tiberius collected the whole force in Rome, and stationed it in a permanent camp near the 'agger' of Servius Tullius; hence the phrase here "castra domestica." The number of cohorts was afterwards raised by Vitellius to sixteen. The term for the guard under the empire was 'praetoriani,' or 'praetoriae cohortes,' and their commander was 'praefectus praetoris.' The post was one of great influence, and was held by Sejanus himself. See note on l. 63 above. The reference in this passage, however, is not so much to the appointment to this post as to the influence acquired by having the guard itself at the minister's disposition. See the earlier part of this note.

96. et, qui] "even those who."

97, 98.] "But can any prosperity compensate for a reverse of equal magnitude?" "Ut—par sit mensura:" "that you should have to undergo" . . .

99. hujus] scil. of Sejanus. For "praetextam" see note on Sat. i. 77, 78.

100. potestas] "A magistracy;"—a familiar instance of the use of the 'abstract' for the 'concrete.' The first sense of the word is "constituted authority." From this it comes to mean specifically "a magistracy," and hence "the person invested with it." It has formed the Italian 'podesta,' which in the same way means "a magistrate." 'Fiden. Gabiorum': see note on Sat. vi. 56.

101. vasa minora] "short measures." To break these was one of the aedile's duties.

102. Ulubris] A town of the same class as Gabii. See Hor. Ep. i. 11. 30: "Quod petis hic est, Est Ulubris, animus si te non deficit aequus." The "aedile" in a country-town would be little more than a police-serjeant, and, at Ulubrae, probably ragged enough. Hence "pannosus" here.

105—107.] So Hor. Od. ii. 10. 10, "celsae graviore casu Decidunt turres." "Praecepta" is used as a substantive, "downfall." Cf. Sat. i. 149.

108. Crassos—Pompeios] Plurals used for singulars. By "Crassos" is meant Licinius Crassus, the (so-called) triumvir, who was defeated and killed by the Parthians at the battle of Carrhae, B.C. 55. For the fate of Pompey see l. 285, 286, and note.
 109, 110. illum—Quirites] i.e. Julius Caesar.

112. generum Cereris] Pluto, who wedded her daughter Proserpine.

113. sicca morte] i. e. 'incruenta.' "Et" has the effect of repeating the "pauci descendunt" from the preceding clause.

115. Quinquatribus] The festival of Minerva at Rome bore this name. It was so called from the "quinque dies" of the festival, which was kept on the 19th March, and four following days; or more probably because the 19th was the fifth day after the Ides. The rhetoric master's fee (Sat. vii. 157) was paid at this festival; and it would of course be a suitable time to petition for the special gifts of the goddess.

116. quisquis—Minervam] i. e. "the merest lad who still pays but an 'as' for his schooling."

117. custos—capsae] the "capsarius;" a small slave, who attended the pupil to school, carrying his books. The latter were rolled up and put in a case ("capsa"), from which the name was derived. See note on Sat. i. 5, 6. The slave would usually be one of the petted 'vernae,' or slaves born in the house; see on Sat. ix. 10. "Vernula" is nom. to "sequitur," and "custos" in apposition to it.

120—126.] The fate of Cicero.

120. manus—caesa] Cicero was one of the earliest victims to the 'proscription' commenced by the triumvirs, Antony, Lepidus, and Augustus. See note on Sat. ii. 28. His twelve Philipics against Antony, although models of eloquence (see l. 125, 126), naturally excited the animosity of their object. Cicero was at his Tusculan villa when the list of the "proscribed" was made out. He attempted to escape by sea, but was compelled by stress of weather to land at Formiae, where he was overtaken by the executioners. His head and hands were cut off, and nailed to the 'rostra' in the Forum.

121. pusilli] inferior.

122.] The line here quoted is from a poem of Cicero's, "De meis temporibus."

122—124.] "Had Cicero been as bad an orator as he was poet, he would have escaped assassination." Cicero's poetry was severely handled by ancient writers. See Quintilian, ix. 4. 41, where this unhappy line, "O fortunatam natam," &c., is cited to enforce the warning, "Videndum ne syllabae verbi prioris ultimae sint primae sequentis." So too Martial, Ep. 2. 89. 3, 4, "Carmina quod

See Cic. in Pison. 29 extr. 30: "Scire cupio, quid tandem isto in versu reprehendas, 'cedant arma togae?' . . . At in altero illo, inquit, haeres, 'Concedat laurea linguae,' &c. This line, "Cedant arma togae," "concedat laurea linguae," is also from the poem "De meis temporibus."

126. volveris — proxima] The well-known Philippica secunda. It is the most masterly of all the speeches against Antony. See note on L 120 above. For "volveris" see note on Sat. i. 5, 6.

126—132.] The fate of Demosthenes. After the death of Alexander, Demosthenes succeeded in forming a general confederacy under the Athenians against the Macedonian power. After the battle of Cranon however (B.C. 322) the alliance fell to pieces, and Antipater marched against Athens, and demanded the surrender of Demosthenes. The latter had fled to the temple of Poseidon at Calauria; but finding that he was to be given up to Antipater, destroyed himself by poison; the "saevus—exitus" of l.

128. theatri] After the theatre of Dionysus was built. B.C. 340, the ἑκκλησία was held there instead of in the Pnyx. But perhaps "theatrum" is used only in its secondary meaning of "an assembly." So Cic. de Divin. i. 28: "magnificentissimum senatus-consultum frequentissimo theatro incredibili clamore et plausu comprobatum."

130—132.] The father of Demosthenes was a sword-cutler.

133. truncis] (adjective) "headless." The "tropaeum" was originally formed on the field of battle, by pollarding a tree, and suspending the spoils from it. So Virg. Aen. xi. 5—8: "Ingentem quercum decisis undique ramis Constituit tumulo fulgentiaque induit arma, Mezenti ducis exuvias, tibi, magne, tropaeum, Armipotens." The shape thus given was always retained by the "tropaeum."

157, 158.] See Livy xxii. 2 fin.,

"Ipse Hannibal, aeger oculis ex verna primum intemperie variante calores frigoraque, elephanto vectus—tandem altero oculo capitur." The 'elephanto' is the "Gaetula belua" here.

159—166.] After the defeat of Zama, Hannibal's influence gradually declined at Carthage. Finding that he would be given up to the Romans, Hannibal fled to the court of Antiochus, who gave him the command of a naval force. After the defeat of Antiochus at Magnesia, B.C. 190, the Romans demanded the surrender of Hannibal as one of the conditions of peace. He escaped, however, to the court of Prusias, king of Bithynia (the "Bithyno tyranno" of l. 161, 162), where he passed some years in security. The Romans, however, again demanded his surrender, and Prusias was unable to protect him. Seeing that this was the case, Hannibal put an end to his life by poison, probably in the year B.C. 183. For "praetoria" see note on Sat. i. 75.

161, 162. sedet — tyranno] The detail of Hannibal's arrival at the court of Prusias (of which the incident here referred to seems to have formed part) is not preserved in any extant history. But perhaps l. 162 merely amplifies the idea of the "cliens" in the preceding line. A "cliens" would often have to wait for his patron in this way.

166. annulus] Hannibal carried the poison concealed in a ring; "hausto quod sub annuli gemma habebat, veneno." Aurel. Vict. 42. Cornel. Nepos (Hann. 12) only says, "venenum quod semper secum habere consueverat." There seems no ground for supposing a reference to the "three bushels of knights' rings" taken at Cannae.

168. Pellaeo juveni] Alexander; from his birth-place Pella in Macedonia.

170. ut] "As if he had been."

178. Sostratus] This author is unknown. He had probably written a "Xerxica" in poetry; unless (from the reference in l. 176, 177) he is the writer "de fluviis" mentioned by Plutarch περὶ ποταμῶν "Ἰσμηνός."

ib. madidis—alis] "with reeking arm-pits." From the exertion of reciting ("cantat").

210 cantante] "in music." Lit. "when one is playing." "Cantare" is used equally of vocal and instrumental music.

211. Seleucus] It is not known who is meant. "Sit licet:" sub. "is qui cantet."

212. quibus] Probably the "tibicines." Their display in dress is noticed Hor. A. P. 215, "traxitque vagus (scil. 'tibicen') per pulpita vestem."

Comparing the success of Alexander with the varied fortune of the Romans, he says, "Miremur, si quum ex hac parte (on the side of the Romans) saecula plura numerentur quam ex illa (the side of Alexander) anni, plus in tam longo spatio quam in aetate tredecim annorum fortuna variaverit?" "saecula" of Roman existence, as compared with the years of Alexander's military exploits, can only mean "generations."

249. dextra—annos] In counting with the fingers the Romans began with the left hand, and counted on it up to 100 inclusive, when they changed to the right; so that Nestor had turned the 100 years. The same process of counting was repeated at every 100, e. g. at 200 they went back to the left, at 300 back to the right, and so on. The passage has been taken to mean that Nestor had turned the three hundred years, i. e. had come to the right hand the second time. But this has arisen from overlooking the more limited meaning of "saeculum." See last note.

250. novum—bibit] "so often drank new wine afresh," i. e. saw so many vintages. "Mustum" is "new wine" without the addition of the "novum."

252. stamine] scil. 'fatorum.' Sat. iii. 27 and note.

253. Antilochi barbam] A periphrasis for Antilochus himself. He was the son of Nestor, and killed by Memnon in defending his father at the siege of Troy. This occurred after the action of the Iliad terminated, but is mentioned Odys. iii. 111, 112. Nestor says to Telemachus, ἴνθα δ' ἰμὸς φίλος υἱὸς (scil. καί-ται), ἅμα κρατερὸς καὶ ἀμύμων, 'Αντίλοχος. See also Odys. iv. 187, 188. Cf. Pindar, Pyth. vi. 28—42, where the incident is detailed; also Hor. Od. ii. 9. 13—16, "At non ter aevo functus amabilem Ploravit omnes Antilochum senex Annos."

256.] See Pindar, Pyth. iii. 178—182, τοῦ δὲ (Πήλεος) παῖτε . . . ἐν πολέμῳ τόξοι ἀπὸ ψυχᾶν λιπὼν Ὀρσιν κυρὶ καίόμενος 'Ἐκ Δυναῶν γόον.

257. alius] Laertes. See Hom. Odys. xxiv. 287—296. 315—317. Peleus enquires of the supposed stranger (who is Ulysses himself), πόσσον δὴ ἔτος ἵστίη ὅτε ξείνισσας ἐκείνου, Σὸν ξείνον δύστηνον, ἰμὸν παῖδ' (εἰ ποτ' ἔην γε) Δύσμορον; When told it was five years since, ἀμφοτέρησι δὲ χερσὶν ἑλὼν κόμην αἰθαλόισσαν Χρύατο κὰκ κεφαλῆς πολιῆς, ἀδινὰ στεναχίζων.

ib. natantem] "sea-tost."

261. ut] "and so that."

ib. primos edere planctus] i. e. to be the chief female mourner. The custom of having female "wailers" at funerals is well known.

267—270.] See the well-known description of the combat between Priam and Neoptolemus, Virg. Aen. ii. 526—558.

271. exitus—hominis] "However, that end was at least human;" opp. to Hecuba's transformation in the next line.

271, 272.] See this predicted to Hecuba, Eurip. Hec. 1265, κύων γενήσῃ, πύρρ' ἔχουσα δέργματα. Ovid (Met. xiii. 565—569) makes the transformation immediate on Polymnestor's punishment: "Clade sui Thracum gens irritata tyranni, Troada telorum lapidumque incessere jactu Coepit. At haec missum rauco cum murmure saxum Morsibus insequitur; rictuque in verba parato Latravit, conata loqui."

there.

275. spatia ultima] The race-course in the Circus was called "spatium," and the chariots ran several times round it. Hence "spatia ultima" means lit. "the last course."

283—286.] Pompey was seized with a dangerous illness at Neapolis in Campania, B.C. 50. On that occasion prayers were offered in several places for his recovery. "Multae urbes et publica vota vicerunt," l. 284, 285. After his defeat by Caesar at Pharsalia, Pompey fled to Egypt. On landing he was treacherously murdered, and his head cut off, and brought to Caesar. Hence, l. 285, 286, "Fortuna—servatum victo caput abstulit," "robbed him in his defeat of the head which had been thus preserved;" i.e. he recovered from his sickness only to undergo defeat and decapitation. It is thus opposed to the "integer" and "cadavere toto," l. 288.

313. exigere] sub. “solent.”

314. laqueos] The iron-meshed net in which Vulcan entangled Mars to punish his adultery with Venus. The story is told in Hom. Od. viii. 266—366.

315. lex ulla] The Lex Julia de Adulteris allowed the husband to kill the adulterer only under certain restrictions.

318—321.] “But your handsome boy, you think, will at least only be thus criminal where he loves. Quite the contrary. You will find him do it for mere profit. He will strip his wretched companion even of her trinkets.” Endymion was the handsome hunter of Mount Latmus, beloved by Selene (the moon). She laid him to perpetual sleep in a cavern of the mountain, that she might visit him without interruption.

324—345.] “But you will say he may be pure-minded; what mischief will his beauty then do him? Did then purity save Hippolytus or Bellerophon? or save Silius in our own time?” The story of Hippolytus is well known from the exquisite tragedy of Euripides. His spotless life provoked the displeasure of Aphrodite, who inspired his step-mother, Phaedra, with a fatal passion. This however Hippolytus refused to gratify. Phaedra revenged herself by committing suicide, leaving a written letter in which she accused Hippolytus of having attempted her chastity. His father, Theseus, acted upon the statement. Poseidon had promised to grant any three prayers which he might address to him, and Theseus now preferred one for his son's death. As Hippolytus drove along the coast to quit Attica, his horses were scared by a sea-monster sent by Poseidon, and Hippolytus was thrown from the chariot and mortally injured. Artemis, whom Hippolytus had worshipped, appeared to him as he was dying, and apprised Theseus of his error. Hippolytus is said to have been restored to life by Aesculapius. According to a tradition adopted by Virgil (Aen. vii. 774—777), he was carried by Artemis to the grove of Aricia in Latium, where he was worshipped under the name of Virbius.

Bellerophon narrowly escaped the same fate at the court of Proetus, where he had fled to be purified from a murder. The monarch's wife, Antea (otherwise Sthenoboea, l. 327), fell in love with him, and finding he resisted her solicitations, accused him to her husband. Bellerophon was sent to the court of Iobates, king of Lycia, with the famous "Bellerophontae litterae,"—a sealed letter containing a request that the bearer might be killed. Instead of himself executing the order, Iobates sent his guest against the Chimaera. From this expedition, however, he returned victorious; and having escaped some similar dangers, eventually succeeded to the throne of Lycia.

326, 327. haec] i. e. Phaedra. See last note. "Cressa" in l. 327 is also Phaedra.

327. excanduit] Became enraged: lit. "grew hot." It has been rendered, "blushed" (with the shame of the repulse). But the verb never has this meaning.

328. concussere] "roused to anger."

331, 332. optimus—patriciae] i. e. Caius Silius. He was of remarkable beauty, and excited a passion in the empress Messalina, the wife of Claudius. See Sat. vi. 116 seqq. She at last insisted on his going through the form of a marriage with her. As the alternative was assassination (see l. 338, 339), he was forced to comply, and the mock marriage was celebrated in the 'horti Luculliani.' Claudius was at this time absent at Ostia. The news at last reached him, and he ordered Silius to be put to death. Messalina herself was dispatched by the orders of Narcissus, the emperor's freedman. See Sat. iv. 329—331, where the transaction is inaccurately stated as follows: "cujus (scil. Narcissi) paruit imperiis, uxorem occidere jussus," scil. Claudius. The fact really was that Narcissus found he had not sufficient influence with the emperor to overcome his attachment to Messalina, and accordingly took the order on himself.

333—336. parato—auspex] i. e. goes through all the ceremonies of a regular marriage. Cf. Sat. ii. 117—126; and see last note.

333. illa] Messalina.

A NOTE OF INVITATION.

Atticus eximie si coenat, lautus habetur;
Si Rutilus, demens. Quid enim majore cachinno Excipitur vulgi, quam pauper Apicius? Omnis Convictus, thermae, stationes, omne theatrum
De Rutilo. Nam dum valida ac juvenilia membra 5
Sufficiunt galeae, dumque ardent sanguine, fertur,
Non cogente quidem, sed nec prohibente tribuno, Scripturus leges et regia verba lanistae.
Multos porro vides, quos saepe elusus ad ipsum
Creditor introitum solet expectare macelli, 10
Et quibus in solo vivendi causa palato est.
Egregius coenat meliusque miserrimus horum Et cito casurus jam perluciente ruina.
Interea gustus elementa per omnia quaerunt,

1. Atticus] T. Pomponius Atticus, well known as Cicero's correspondent. He was a man of enormous wealth.

2. Rutilus] Some spendthrift noble of the day.

3. Apicius] Sat. iv. 23 and note.

4. convictus] (like 'convivia') "banquets."

ib. thermae] See note on Sat. vii. 233.

ib. stationes] (the Gr. λίσσας) "lounges;" i. e. places where people stand about and talk.

5—8.] Cf. Sat. viii. 192—200, and note.

7. tribuno] Probably the emperor. This was one of the offices concentrated in the emperor's person. See Sat. ii. 165. He ought therefore, in the latter capacity, to have prohibited such a public scandal. The 'tribuni plebis,' as such, had nothing to do with regulating the public morals.

ib. non cogente] See Sat. viii. 193 and note.

8. leges—lanistae] See note on Sat. iii. 158.

12. egregius] Compar. of "egregie."

13. casurus—ruina] Metaphoric, from the wall of a ruinous house, when the daylight begins to show through the fissures. "Ruina," "its approaching fall."

15. 16. interius si attendas] Examine more narrowly; lit. inwardly.

17, 18. perituram—fracta] "procure the price of these indulgences by pawning." "Oppositis," sub. "pignori;" lit. given to pledge, i. e. pawned.

18. matris imagine fracta] sub. "opposita pignori;" "fracta" being used as an adjective. "Lancibus et imagine oppositis" are the ablative of the means, after "accersere;" "by pawning them."

19. condire] "season," i. e. load with delicacies. "Quadringentis numis," abl. of the price. "Numis," i. e. "sestertii." See note on Sat. i. 106.

20. miscellanea] sub. "fercula;" "scrap-dinner." "Sic," "by this course."

ib. ludi] Of the lanista's school, l. 8.

32. Ventidio] Sat. vii. 199.

26, 27.] "The difference between a strong box and a purse;" i. e. between what a rich man may spend and a poor one.

27. Γῶθι σεαυρόν] It is doubtful which of the sages of antiquity was the author of this. Hence, perhaps, "e coelo descendit."

31. se traducebat Ulixes] "even Ulysses did not show to advantage;" lit. discredited himself. See note on Sat. ii. 159. The contest of Ulysses and Ajax for the arms of Achilles is well known.

33. te consule] "deliberate well first of all whether you have capacity for it."

34. vehemens] "powerful."

ib. Curtius] Sat. iv. 107 and note. For "Matho," see note on Sat. i. 32.

ib. buccae] "mouthing actors;" lit. cheeks. Cf. Sat. iii. 55.

43. annulus] The badge of equestrian or senatorial rank.

ib. Pollio] Perhaps the Crepereius Pollio of Sat. ix. 6, 7.

44, 45.] "What spendthrifts have to fear is not an early death, but more than even death itself, old age." "Luxuriae" (for 'luxuriosis'), dat. after "metuenda."

44. praematuri—acerbum] These were technical terms. The death of youths was 'praematura,' or 'immatura.' "Quod si immatura manebat Sors natum" is used by Evander of Pallas. 'Acerba mors' was the death of an infant. So Virg. Aen. vi. 428, 429, "Quos dulcis vitae exsortes, et ab ubere raptos Abstulit atra dies, et funere meruit acerbo."

46. Hi] "the following are."

47, 48. dominis—fenoris auctor] "the creditors."

49.] "Those who do not mind a temporary absence from Rome, go to some pleasant watering-place."

"Vertere solum" is properly to go into voluntary exile. It is used humorously here of a residence at Baiae. The latter would seem to have been the same refuge for "the unfortunate" which Boulogne is now-a-days. For "ostrea," see note on Sat. viii. 86.

50. cedere foro] "become bankrupt." This was the technical term for it, the shops of the bankers ('argentarii') being round the forum. Cf. Sat. x. 25 and note.

ib. Subura] Sat. iii. 5 and note. "Ferventi," "bustling."

51. Esquilias] The "gelidas Esquilias" of Sat. v. 77, 78. So Hor. Sat. i. 8. 14, "Nunc licet Esquilias habitare salubribus."

53. Circensibus] sub. "ludis." See Sat. iii. 223 and note.

57. Persice] A friend of Juvenal's, whom he thus invites to a frugal supper.

ib. non praestem—re] "fail to carry out in life, character, or fact."

58. laudem—ganeo] Imitated from Hor. Ep. i. 7. 35, "Nec somnum plebis laudo satur altitium."

59. coram—puero] "give my slave the order for in public." Opp. to "in aure."

60—63.] "For as you are engaged to dine with me, you will find me an Evander (of frugality), and must yourself be as condescending as Hercules or Aeneas." See Virg. Aen. viii. 359—366, "Talibus inter ae (Evander and Aeneas) dictis ad tecta subibant Pauperis Evandri . . . Ut ventum ad sedes : Haec, inquit (scil. Evander), limina victor Alcides subit ; haec illum regia cepit. Aude, hospes, contemnere opes, et te quoque dignum Finge deo ; rebusque veni non asper egenis."

62. contingens sanguine coelum] scil. through his mother Venus.

63. alter (Aeneas) aquis] scil. "ad sidera missus." He fell in battle with the Rutulians, and was supposed to have been drowned in the river Numicius. As the body was never found, it was believed to have been transported to heaven, and Aeneas was worshipped on the banks of the river as 'Jupiter Indiges.'

ib. alter flammis] The reference is to the death of Hercules on the funeral pyre of Mount Oeta. His wife Deianira unwittingly sent him a poisoned shirt, which caused such agony that Hercules resolved on burning himself to death. He was carried up from the pyre to Olympus. The story of the robe and the sufferings of Hercules form the subject of the "Trachiniae" of Sophocles.

70. torto calentia foeno] "Still warm in their twisted hay" (that in which they were laid, and which was wrapped round them) ; i. e. new-laid.

72. parte anni] "through some portion of the year." It was now spring. See l. 75, 76.

74. Picens] dat. after "aemula." Cf. Hor. Sat. ii. 4. 70, "Picens cedunt pomis Tiburtia succo."

75, 76. siccatur—Auctumnum] "Now that they have lost their

78. Curius] Sat. ii. 3 and note.

79. brevibus] "pinched." Sat. iii. 286.

80. in magna—fossor] "even a slave in the 'ergastulum.'" See Sat. viii. 180 and note.

81. vulva popinae] "the swine's matrix of the cook's shop."

82. rura—crate] "open wicker-work," to admit the smoke.

84. lardum] contracted from 'laridum,' "bacon."

85. accedente—carne] "with the addition only of a fresh-killed joint (in Juvenal's time the Romans had learnt to hang theirs) if a victim offered one;" i. e. if there had been a sacrifice. The victims, with the exception of the thighs, and other parts burnt on the altar, were eaten by those present at the sacrifice. See Hom. passim.

88. maturius] "earlier."

89. erectum] "on his shoulder."

ib. domito—a monte] "from the hillock he had been digging." So Virg. Aen. ix. 608, "rastris terram domat."

90, 91.] "While people had a wholesome dread of the censor."

90. Fabios—Catonem—Scauros—Fabricios] Names of famous censors. Q. Fabius Maximus, the well-known conqueror of Samnium, was censor B.C. 304. Cato is always known as "Cato the censor," from the austerity with which he enforced that office. Aemilius "Scaurus" was censor B.C. 109. For "Fabricius," see note on Sat. ix. 142.

91, 92.] The reference is probably to a story of Claudius Nero and Livius. They were censors B.C. 204, and both 'equites equo publico.' See note on Sat. x. 94, 95. Claudius compelled his colleague to sell his horse, on account of his condemnation in a trial by the people some years previously, and Livius retaliated. See Liv. xxix. 37. The Scholiast refers the lines to an altercation between Fabius Maximus (l. 90) and his colleague in the censorship, P. Decius Mus. This, however, is not mentioned elsewhere;—they had a dispute in their joint consulship nine years afterwards. See Liv. x. 24.

95. Trojugenis] See note on Sat. i. 100.

96, 97.] "But on its unadorned side and diminutive couch (an hen-diadys for the bare side of the couch) a frontlet of brass exhibited the wreathed ass's head;" i. e. as its only ornament. Hyginus (Fab. 274 init.) speaks of the couches of antiquity having this decoration. This was because the ass had done good service in cropping the upper twigs of the vine, and thus teaching the art of pruning. Columella (x. 344, 345) mentions the practice of fixing an ass's head flayed on the boundaries of fields, apparently in connexion with some Etrurian rite.

97. vile] "cheap."

98. ruris alumni] "nurslings of the rustic home;" the farmer's children.

100—107.] "The soldiers then broke to pieces the bronzes of captured cities, to use the metal for military decorations." This was probably suggested by the wholesale destruction of works of art at Corinth, on its capture by Mummius b.c. 146. The general himself told the persons with whom he contracted for the shipment of a portion of these treasures, that they would have to replace them if lost.

100. nescius] "untaught to." So "Pelidae stomachum cedere nescii," Hor. Od. i. 6. 6.

104, 105.] The figures of Romulus and Remus. Cf. Virg. Aen. viii. 630—634. Vulcan portrayed on the shield of Aeneas "fetam Mavortis in antro Procubuisse lupam; geminos huic ubera circum Ludere pendentis pueros, et lambere matrem Impavidos; illam tereti cervice reflexam Mulcere alternos, et corpora fingere lingua."

107. dei] scil. Mars. He is supposed to be represented on the helmet descending from the sky in armour; hence "pendentis."

109. farrata] "porridge." Lit. made of corn, with 'cibaria' understood.

ib. Tusco] The Etrurian pottery is well known.

110.] Ironica. "Pray envy them, if you are so disposed."

111—114.] See this story in Livy v. 32. The voice was heard by a plebeian, M. Caedicius, in the Via Nova.

116. Jupiter] i. e. his image. For "violatus," cf. Sat. iii. 20.

117. nostra ex arbore] As walnut ("nucem," l. 119), oak, &c.; opposed to the foreign woods or materials mentioned afterwards.

118. hos—usus] "for this purpose the wood was stacked;" i. e. to make the furniture.

122. orbes] "tables;" lit. the circumference of the table. See note on Sat. i. 137.

123. ebur, et—pardus] This is an hendiadys, like "pateris et auro," Virg. Georg. ii. 192. It means "an ivory panther;" i. e. a claw to the table carved in that shape.

124. porta Syenes] Syene was at the southern extremity of the Roman province of Egypt; and a garrison was kept, and tolls levied in it, as a frontier town. Hence Syene, with the adjoining city of Elephantine, are called by Tacitus (Ann. ii. 61) "claustra Romani imperii." And thus here "porta." A considerable trade was carried on there in elephants' tusks brought from the interior, from which Elephantine took its name.

125. obscurior] "darker."

126. Nabataeo] i. e. Arabian. The Nabataei were a people of Arabia Petraea, stated by Josephus to be the descendants of Ishmael, from whose eldest son (Nebaioth) they derived their name.

ib. belua] The elephant.

127, 128. hinc—bilis] "From this comes, I suppose, their appetite and digestion,"—ironic. The bile in certain quantities is necessary to digest the food. "Hinc" is of course "from the ivory claw."

128. argenteus] "A mere silver."

129. annulus ferreus] Iron rings were worn by those who were not entitled to wear gold. See note on l. 43 above. It therefore indicated a mean condition.

130, 131. res—exiguas] "poverty." So in Hor. Od. iii. 16. 25, "Contemptae dominus splendidior rei."

132, 133. nec—materia] "neither a mosaic ('tessellae'), nor even a counter of it."

136. structor] Sat. v. 120, note.

136, 137. cui—pergula] "who has no rival in the carving-school." 'Pergula' was a booth open to the street, like a cobbler's stall. It was used either as a workshop, or by poor teachers of grammar, rhetoric, or other accomplishments, including, it would seem, the art of carving. Cf. note on Sat. vii. 173.

137—141. Thrypheri] A famous "structor" of the day, who taught the art of arranging a table and carving. See note on Sat. v. 120. The lesson was illustrated by wooden models; hence l. 141, "lautissima ulmea coena (in appos. with 'lepus' &c.)" "a most splendid (elm) supper."

139. Scythicae volucres] "pheasants." "Scythicae" is used for "Phasianae;" i. e. natives of the river Phasis in Colchis. The bird takes its name from the latter.

141. Subura] Sat. iii. 5 and note.

142—144.] "As for slaves, mine is too innocent to filch (i. e. from the dish) a piece of kid or the wing of a guinea-fowl; novice as he is, and uncivilized on all occasions, and only practised in thefts of a tiny scrap (from the plates)." The "Afra avis" occurs also in Hor. Epod. 2. 53.

146. a frigore tutus] "With just clothes to keep him warm;" (not for finery.)

148. magno] sub. "pretio." "Latine"—since he is home born, not a foreigner. "Poscis," "call for any thing."

155.] "Such as I only wish our high-born youth were." "Ardens purpura," i. e. the "toga praetexta." See note on Sat. i. 78.

156. diffusa] See on Sat. v. 30.

159, 160. vina—venit] i. e. the "vin du pays;"—opposed to imported or "fine" wines.

178, 179. dulciam] i. e. with Homer. For "cantabitur" ("recited") see Sat. vii. 153.

184, 185. prima—uxor] So the empress Messalina, Sat. vi. 116—132.

192—202.] "Meanwhile, let the people at Rome enjoy the races at their pleasure."

191. mappae] The signal for the chariots to start was given, by the praetor dropping a napkin ; so that it is equivalent to "races."

ib. Megalesiacae] From the Megalesia (or 'Megalenses ludii'), celebrated in honour of Cybele, the μεγάλη μνήμη. See on Sat. iii. 137. Hence they are here called the "Idaeum solenne," l. 192. They took place in Apr. ; see Sat. vi. 69, and note : and it appears from l. 75, 76, of this Satire, that it was written about the same time. See note on l. 72. During the Republic, these 'ludi' consisted only of scenic representations. From the present passage, however, they had evidently come to include chariot-races in the Circus as well ; and it would seem that there existed the same enthusiasm as those of the 'magni ludi' themselves. See Sat. iii. 223, and note.

191, 192. colunt] "honour."
"Spectacula" is the nomin. to the verb, and "Idaeum solenne" the accus. after it.

192. similis triumpho] See note on Sat. x. 36-46.

193. Praetor] See note to Sat.
vii. 87.

ib. praeda caballorum] i. e. at their mercy, if they choose to run away. He was himself seated in a chariot; see Sat. x. 42. It is also explained, a prey to his horses; i. e. eaten up by the expense of keeping them. But this seems far-fetched.

ib. pace] "by the leave of;" i. e.
without offence to. It is most common in the phrase "pace tua."

195-202.] See l. 53. and notes on Sat. iii. 223; vii. 114.

198, 199. veluti-consulibus] Livy says (xxii. 54), "Romam . . . occidione occisos cum duobus exercitibus consules, deletasque omnes co-piae, allatum fuerat. Nunquam, salva urbe, tantum pavoris tumultusque intra moenia Romana fuit."

200. sponsio] Here, the betting on the 'factions' of the chariots, which often ran very high. See on Sat. vii.
114.

202. quod-aliquem] "what they would have blushed for any one even to have described;"—opposed to "spectent." "Ipsis," scil. "nup-tae."

203. contracta] wrinkled. We are too old for that sort of thing.

204. togam] See note on Sat. iii.
172.

ib. Jam nunc] i. e. as to-day is public holiday.

204, 205. salva fronte] without blushing.

205, 206. quamquam—sextam] See note on Sat. i. 49, "ab octava." Anticipating the bath, and therefore the "coena," by two hours, was, of course, a speciality of this day's holiday. See note on l. 204.

206. quinque diebus] The remaining five days of the festival.

1. natali—dulcior] So Hor. Od. iv. 11. 17, "Jure sollemnis mihi sanctiorque Paene natali proprio."

ib. haec lux] He proposes to keep it as a festival for the safe return of their mutual friend Catullus.

2. cespes] The turf-altar. Hor. Od. i. 19, 13, "Hic vivum mihi cespitem;" iii. 8. 3, 4, "positusque carbo in Cespite vivo."

3. Reginae] to Juno. There was a temple of 'Juno Regina' on the Aventine.

4. pugnanti—Maura] to Minerva. "Gorgone Maura," "with" it; i. e. with the 'aegis,' which had Medusa's head upon it.

5. funem] scil. by which it is being led to the altar.

6. Tarpeio] i. e. Capitolino.

11. Hispulla] Some notoriously stout lady; perhaps the Hispulla of Sat. vi. 74.

13. Clitumni pascua] Virg. Georg. ii. 146—148, "Hinc albi, Clitumna, greges, et maxima taurus Victima, saepe tuo perfusi flumine sacro, Romanos ad templa deam duxere triumphos."

13, 14. sanguis—cervix] In apposition with 'taurus' (repeated from l. 11 before "iret"); "a bull, blood of Clitumnus, neck that the priest's attendant must be tall to strike." The minister was termed 'popa.' He stunned the victim with a blow on the head, and then cut the throat.

17. ictus] nom. plural.

18. evasi] sub. "fuerunt." The four following lines amplify the "fulguris ictus."

21. conferri posse] i. e. be so bad as.

23. poetica] "poet-loved."

24. genus—aliud discriminis] viz. that which he describes l. 30—61; the lightening the ship of its cargo, and cutting away the mast. "Genus," "aspect."

25, 26. quamquam — ejusdem] "Although, in fact, the other incidents of the storm are of the same class;" i. e. calling for commiseration. But the meaning is obscure.

26. pars dira] in apposition to "genus aliud." "A fearful part indeed of the peril."

27, 28.] Those who had escaped shipwreck had a picture ('tabula' or 'tabella') of their disaster painted, with which they walked about, soliciting charity. See Sat. xiv. 302.

The 'tabula,' with the dress in which they had escaped, was afterwards hung up in some temple as a thank-offering. See Hor. Od. i. 5. 13—16, "Me tabula sacer Votiva paries indicat uvida Suspendisse potenti Vestimenta maris Deo."

28. Iside] From the frequency of her worship at Rome in Juvenal's time. See Sat. vi. 528 and note. One of her titles was also Pelagia, which would be an additional reason for her mention here. "Pictores," i. e. of the "tabella."

30. alveus] the hold.

31, 32.] "The waves laying the ship, unsteady log that she was, on her beam-ends." Lit. "oversetting in turns each side of the ship." "Arboris incertae" will thus be in apposition with "puppis." The expression is of course feeble, but it is far from being the only instance in this Satire.

33, 34. decidere—ventis] "to tom

Sed vitio caeci propter patrimonia vivunt.)

up with the winds for it." Lit. "to settle the dispute by a cast of the dice;" scil. "talorum." There is of course a pun on the 'jactura' of the cargo, l. 37—47, 52, 53. 'Decidere,' sub. 'litem,' was the technical term for a compromise in the law-courts.

39. teneris—Maecenatibus] Sat. i. 66 and note.

40, 41. quarum—pecus] The construction is "quarum pecus ipsum natura generosi graminis infecit;" and "pecus" is used for 'lanam.' The wool had a natural colour, and so did not require dyeing. Cf. Virg. Eclog. iv. 42—45, "Nec varios discet" (scil. in the restored golden age) "mentiri lana coloreas, Ipse sed in pratis aries jam suave rubenti Murice, jam croceo mutabit vellera luto; Sponte sua sandyx pascentes vestiet agnos." Martial (Ep. xiv. 133) speaks of the Baetic pastures in a similar way, "Non est lana mihi mendax" (the "lacerna Baetica" is supposed to speak), "nec mutor aeno: Si placeant Tyriae, mea tinxit ovis."

41. sed et] "although too."

41, 42. egregius fons—et Baeticus—aer] i.e. by hendiadys, "the river Baetis, and its admirable climate."

Baetis is the Spanish Guadalquivir. Andalusia, through which it flows, has always been famous for its beauty and fertility.

43. ille] i. e. Catullus. "Mittere," "throw overboard."

44. Parthenio] i. e. "a Parthenio;" a silver-chaser apparently of high repute at this period.

ib. urnae] Sat. vi. 426 and note.

45. Pholus] A centaur. His capacious goblet is mentioned by Theocritus, 6. 149, 150, ἀρά γε πᾶ τοιόνδε Φόλω κατὰ λαΐνον ἄντρον Κρητῆρ' Ἑρακλῆι χεῖρων ἐστάσατο χεῖρων; ib. conjuge Fusci] Some lady equally bibulous with the Laufella of Sat. ix. 117.

47. caelati—Olynthi] "chased plate of king Philip." "Emtor Olynthi." Philip got possession of this town (the subject of the Olynthiac Orations of Demosthenes) by bribery. Horace has the same reference: "diffidit urbium Portas vir Macedo, et subruit aemulos Reges muneribus." With "caelati" sub. "argenti."

48—51.] "Catullus did this; but it was more than many others would have done."

52.] Description of the storm and lightening the ship resumed.

54, 55. decidit—submitteret—explicat] scil. Catullus. "Illuc decidit," "he came to this." "Res decidit" would be more usual, but the sentence would not then hang well together.

56. factura minorem] "mutilate;" i. e. by the loss of the mast.

59. taeda] "fir-plank." It is the first meaning of the word.

60. reticulis—lagenae] "with other necessities." "Reticulis," network bags for carrying provisions; a kind of game-bag. "Ventre lag.:" i. e. "big-bellied flagon."

61. in tempestate] In rough weather.

63. vectoris] "The passenger;" from the passive 'vehi.' Catullus is of course meant, and the construction is "postquam prospera tempora vectoris (erant), fatumque (ejus) valentius (erat) Euro et pelago."

64—66.] See Sat. iii. 27 and note.

65, 66. staminis albi] This was for prosperity. When death and disaster were to follow, the Parcae spun black thread.

68. vestibus extentis] The sails having gone over with the mast.

ib. quod] The antecedent is "velo" in the next line : "the foresail."

70—72. gratus—apex] Mons Albanus. See Virg. Aen. i. 267—271, "At puer Ascanius, cui nunc cognomen Iulo Additur . . . Triginta magnos volvendis mensibus orbes Imperio explebit, regnumque ab sede Lavini Transferet, et longam multa vi muniet Albam." Livy follows the same legend : "Is Ascanius abundante Lavinii multitudine, florentem jam urbem novercae reliquit; novam ipse aliam sub Albano monte condidit; quae, ab situ porrectae in dorso urbis Longa Alba appellata." (l. 3.) "Sedes praelata" is in apposition with "apex," l. 72.

71.] "Lavinum" is here used for 'Lavinium.' This was the first settlement of the Trojans in Latium, being called after Lavinia, the daughter of Latinus, and wife of Aeneas. Lavinia was stepmother to Ascanius, who was the son of Aeneas by Creusa: hence "novercali."

72—74.] See Virg. Aen. viii. 43. The river-god Tiber predicts, in the vision seen by Aeneas, "Litoreis ingens inventa sub ilicibus sus, Triginta capitum fetus enixa, jacebit; Alba, solo recubans, albi circum ubera nati." Accordingly, the portent appears soon afterwards (l. 82), "Candida per sylvam cum fetu concolor albo Procubuit viridique in litore conspicitur sus."

74. nunquam visis] "fabulous;" i. e. never really seen.

75—77.] i. e. the port of Ostia. Originally the port was formed by the embouchure of the Tiber, and the Ostia of the republican period means this. The alluvial deposit of the river, however, increased so much, that Ostia ceased to be a sea-port at all, and the cargoes of ships had to be carried up the river in barges. To remedy this, Claudius excavated a new basin, protected by two piers, with an artificial island and light-house between them. These are the "porrecta brachia" and "Tyrrhenam Pharon" of

l. 76. An inner basin was afterwards formed by Trajan. These new works were two miles north of the old Ostia. "Per," "amidst."

79. trunca] shattered; lit. mutilated. This explains the "interiora petit" of l. 80. The ship goes into the inner basin to refit; see last note.

80. Baianae pervia cymbae] "Now safely navigable even by a Lucrine lake-boat." Baianae is used for Lucrinae, the Lacus Lucrinus being half-way between Baiae and Puteoli. The Lucrine is very shallow, and, although connected with the sea both naturally and by the work of Agrippa, referred to Virg. Georg. ii. 161—163 ("Tyrrhenusque fretis immittitur aestus Avernis"), yet protected from it by a sand-bank. Small boats can therefore be employed on it without risk.

81. vertice raso] Both Greek and Roman sailors shaved off their hair after an escape from shipwreck, and dedicated it as a thank-offering.

84. farra imponite cultris] Before striking the victim, its head, as well as the sacrificial fire and knives, were sprinkled with the crumbs of the "mola salsa." This was a cake of roasted barley-meal mixed with salt. Its Greek name is οὐλόχυρα.

 86. præstat] "is the first thing."
 So Virg. Aen. i. 135, "Quos ego—Sed motos præstat componere fluc-tus."

87, 88. parva—simulacra] The Lares and Penates. They were always invoked on starting for a voyage, and saluted on a return from it, as patrons of the family.

88. nitentius cera] Because they were usually made of wax. So Horace (Epod. 2. 66) speaks of the "renidentes Lares."

89. nostrum] "our Roman Jove;"
 i. e. Jupiter Capitolinus.

90. jactabo] will wreath round them.

91, 92. erexit—lucernis] On festive occasions the doors were hung with garlands; see Sat. vi. 51, 52; 227, 228 and note. It would seem from this passage that lamps were also employed in the decorations.

92. festa] This agrees with "janua."
 The translation is, "in holiday-dress celebrates the feast with dawn-kindled lamps." "Operatur" in lit. "sacrifices," like the Greek ἀγῆται.

93. suspecta] As if I were a legacy-hunter. See note on Sat. iv.
 18—22.

95. libet expectare] "You will have to wait long for one who..."

96. impendit] "lay out;" i. e.
 sacrifice. For "gallinam" see Sat.
 xiii. 233 and note.

97. tam sterili] from whom so little is to be got.

ib. haec] i. e. "impensa gallinae."
 They would not even offer a "coturnix," (a still cheaper bird,) though it were for their own father.

98. sentire calorem] "(feel) feverish."

99. Gallita—Paccius] Rich and childless persons. See Sat. iii. 129, 130; iv. 18—22, and note on latter.
 Gallita is possibly the Galvia Crispinilla mentioned by Tac. Hist. i.
 73, as "potens pecunia ac orbitate."
 "Paccius:" perhaps the dramatist of
 Sat. vii. 12.

100. fixis] attached to the images of the gods in the "porticus." See Sat. x. 55 and note.

Porticus: existunt, qui promittunt hecatomben,
 Quatenus hic non sunt nec venales elephantī,
 Nec Latio aut usquam sub nostro sidere talis

 Alter enim, si concedas mactare, vovebit 115

101—104.] "People come forward who vow their hecatomb;—hecatomb of oxen (ἱκατόν βοῦν), that is, since elephants are not to be had. They would vow them if they were."

102—104. quatenus—concipitur] The construction is "Quatenus hic non sunt elephantī, nec venales, nec Latio," &c. "Inasmuch as there are no elephants to be had here, neither imported for sale, nor indigenous." Instead of the adjective which should be coupled with "venales" by the second "nec," the sentence passes (in l. 103. 104) into the finite construction, "nec—concipitur." If l. 102 would have scanned without it, the first "nec" would probably never have been inserted.

104—107. sed—privato] Elephants were imported by the emperors for the procession of the Ludi Magni; see on Sat. x. 36—46. They were strictly pre-erved in the woods near Ardea; hence "Rutulis; Turni—agro," l. 105. See Virg. Aen. vii. 409—413, "Dea tollitur alis Audacis Rutuli ad muros . . . locus Ardea quondam Dictus avis; et nunc magnum manet Ardea nomen, Sed Fortuna fuit. Tectis hic Turnus in altis Jam mediam nigra carpebat nocte quietem."

104. furva gente] i. e. from the Moors. Cf. Sat. xi. 125.

107. siquidem] "inasmuch as." Thus giving the reason for their being "Caesaris armentum."

108. regi Molosso] i. e. Pyrrhus. His elephants, which were the first the Romans had seen, decided the battle of Heraclea, B.C. 280, against the Romans. Molosso is for Epirotae, as Molossia was a province of Epirus.

110. aliquam] "very considerable;" a frequent meaning of the word.

111, 112. Novium—Histrum Pacuvium] Notorious 'captatores' of the day. See note on Sat. iv. 18—22.

112. ebur] for 'elephas.'

113. victima sacra] In apposition with "ebur."

114. tantīs—deīs] i. e. the Lares Gallitae.

ib. horum] scil. Larium. Used for Gallita herself.

115. alter] Pacuvius.

ib. concedas] If the law would let him. "Mactare," sub. "servetur corpora," from l. 116.

De grege servorum magna et pulcerrima quaeque

118—120.] The well-known story of Iphigenia's sacrifice by Agamemnon, and the substitution of the stag. See Eurip. Iph. Aul. 1540—1589.

120. tragicae—cervae] "the stag of tragedy." Referring to the above play. In the Iph. in Taur. l. 28, Iphigenia says, ἀλλ' ἐξέκλεψεν ἱλαφον ἀντιδούσά μου Ἀρτεμις Ἀχαιοῖς. Hence "furtiva piacula" here.

121. meum civem] Pacuvius.

121, 122. nec—rates] Referring still to the story of Iphigenia. "The object of Agamemnon's sacrifice (to procure the liberation of the detained fleet, στόλον Ἀργείων, χιλιοναύταν, Aesch. Ag. 44), is not comparable to the will, for which Pacuvius would make a similar offering."

124. meritum sane mirandum] The vows of Pacuvius, to which the testator would ascribe his recovery.

127. Mycenis (adj.)] i. e. Iphiger Here, of course, it means the daughter whom Pacuvius would sacrifice if he had one. "See, from the success which would then probably tend Pacuvius (l. 123—126) how useful such a victim might be."

129. rapuit Nero] Sat. x. 15—and note.

SATIRA XIII.

A BAD WORLD.

Calvinus is surprised at being cheated; as if it were not an everyday occurrence.

Exemplo quodcumque malo committitur, ipsi Displicet auctori. Prima est haec ultio, quod se Judice nemo nocens absolvitur, improba quamvis Gratia fallacem Praetoris vicerit urnam.

 Tam tenuis census tibi contigit, ut mediocris
 Jacturae te mergat onus; nec rara videmus,

 Tritus, et e medio Fortunae ductus acervo. 10
 Ponamus nimios gemitus: flagrantior aequo
 Non debet dolor esse viri, nec vulnere major.
 Tu quamvis levium minimam exiguamque malo-rum
 Particulam vix ferre potes, spumantibus ardens
 Visceribus, sacrum tibi quod non reddat amicus 15
 Depositum. Stupet haec, qui jam post terga reliquit

1. exemplo—malo] In bad precedent. Similarly, an article of dress is said to be "exempli mali," "in bad style."

2. auctori] the doer.

4. Praetoris—urnam] The "judices" appointed by the Praetor to try a cause (see on Sat. iii. 213) were selected by lots drawn from an urn. If either of the litigants had interest with the Praetor ("gratia") he could favour them by tampering with the lots, so as to ensure their having such judges as they would prefer. Hence here "fallacem Praetoris urnam."

5, 6.] Calvinus, to whom the Satire is addressed, had been defrauded by a person who had not returned a 'depositum;' see l. 15, 16. This is the Greek παρὰκαταθήκη. It was the term for property entrusted for safe keeping to a friend when the owner was likely to be long absent. See note on l. 199—207 post; and Tobit, cap. iv. 20; ix. 5, 6.

7. census] See note on Sat. v. 37.

Sexaginta annos, Fonteio Consule natus?
 An nihil in melius tot rerum proficis usu?
 Magna quidem, sacris quae dat praecepta libellis
 Victrix Fortunae sapientia; dicimus autem 20

 Nec jactare jugum, vita didicere magistra.
 Quae tam festa dies, ut cesset prodere furem,

 Nomen et a nullo posuit Natura metallo: 30
 Nos hominum divûmque fidem clamore ciemus, Quanto Faesidium laudat vocalis agentem Sportula? Dic, senior bulla dignissime, nescis, Quas habeat Veneres aliena pecunia? nescis,

17. Fonteio Consule] There were several consuls of this name. Possibly this is the "Capito Fonteius" of Horace (Sat. i. 5. 32).

19—22.] "Philosophy is a good teacher, but experience a better."

22. jactare] "toss;" i. e. try to shake off, like a heifer or young horse.

25. pyxide] "poison." Lit. the case in which it is kept.

27. Thebarum] Of course here the Θήβη ἐπιτάφυλος (Hom. II. iv. 406) of Boeotia; not the Aegyptian Θήβη ἐκατόμυλος (Hom. II. ix. 383).

28. nona aetas] Mr. Maclean is probably right in referring this to the division of the "Magnus Annus," by the Etruscans and Romans, into ten periods, of which the tenth was to witness the restoration of the first or golden age. See Niebuhr, Rom. Hist. i. 137 seqq. The ninth would, therefore, naturally be the period of greatest declension from it. The ordinary classification by metals cannot be referred to, as these are limited to four,—gold, silver, brass, and iron. An ingenious explanation has been given, by which the "nona aetas" is referred to Solon's division of the life of man into nine periods of seven years each. See Sol. Ep. 1, Brunk's Analecta, p. 64. The ninth period would therefore, of course, be one of decadence: ἴτι μὲν δύναται μαλακώτερον αὐτοῦ. And the rendering would here be, "We are now in the ninth period (i. e. decadence) of the world's life; an age debased below that of iron," &c.: the "aetas" and "saecula" being thus independent images, the latter referring to the metallic classification. But the account first given is probably the true one.

29. quorum] Scil. "saeculorum."

32. Faesidium] Some advocate of note.

ib. agentem] sub. "causas."

32, 33. vocalis—sportula] i. e. his clients, who applaud him for the sake of the "sportula" he distributes. Cf. Sat. x. 46; and see note on Sat. i. 95.

33. senior bulla dignissime] i. e. "you gray-headed child." See Sat. v. 164 and note.

34. Veneres] "charms."

37. rubenti] With the blood of the victims.

38—59.] "They lived thus (i. e. with the honesty you would exact now-a-days) in the golden age." Cf. Sat. vi. init.

39, 40. sumeret—fugiens] See Virg. Aen. viii. 319—325, "Primus ab aethereo venit Saturnus Olympo, Arma Jovis fugiens, et regnis exul ademtis . . . Aurea, quae perhibent, illo sub rege fuerunt Saecula."

40. virguncula] "a little girl."

43. puer Iliacus] Ganymede. "Herculis uxor:" Hebe.

44, 45. et jam—taberna] "Nor any Vulcan, with nectar just drained, wiping his arms sooty with the Liparaean workshop." The description of Vulcan washing after his work is given in Homer, Il. xviii. 414, 415, where Thetis comes to visit him: Σπόγγῳ δ' ἀμφὶ πρόσωπα καὶ ἄμφω χεῖρ' ἀπομόρνυ, Ἀνχίνα τε στιβαρόν καὶ στήθεα λαχύνεα. Nothing is said, indeed, about the cup of nectar, but Juvenal may have drawn on his own imagination for this; or the passage may be a parody on some contemporary poem. (Vulcan was a favourite subject. See Sat. i. 8, 9.) The lines have been thought to refer to the passage Il. i. 597—600, where Vulcan hands round the nectar to avert an impending quarrel. This meaning, however, can hardly be got out of "siccato nectare."

45. Liparaea—taberna] Sat. i. 8, 9, and note.

46. sibi quisque] "separately." Not at a common table, as afterwards.

47. talis] sub. "erat."

49. profundi] Probably "the sea."

50. Sicula—conjuge] See Sat. x. 112 and note. "Sicula:" because Sicily was given to Proserpine by Jupiter at her wedding. See Pind. Nem. i. 18 seqq., νάσω, τὴν Ὀλύμπου διασπότης Ζεὺς ἔδωκεν Φερσίφονα.

51. rota—saxum—vulturis] The well-known legends of Ixion, Sisyphus, and Tityus. For "Furiae" see Aen. vi. 605, "Furiarum maxima juxta Accubat." Scil. neque Ixion and others.

56. barbato cuicumque] "To one a few years older." See note on Sat. vi. 105.

60. depositum] See note on l. 5, 6. The term is amplified in the "veterem—follem" of the next line.

61. aerugine] for, 'aere.' "Its entire contents."

62. prodigiosa fides] sub. "est." "It is an honesty quite portentous."

ib. Tuscis—libellis] Of the intervention of a soothsayer. Cf. Sat. ii. 121 and note. Portents ('prodigia'), such as those mentioned l. 64—70, were under the jurisdiction of the augurs and 'haruspices.' The former, who were the superior class, acted ex officio in certain conventional cases; the latter were specially summoned for the occasion;—rather as private practitioners, and where the portent was of an exceptional kind.

Originally, as was natural, the province both of the augurs and 'haruspices' lay in the future only. The 'haruspex' delivered his predictions from the appearance of the entrails on the altar, the name being probably derived from 'haruga' (an old Latin term for a "victim") and 'spicio,' the root of 'inspicio.' The augurs, on the other hand, drew their predictions from the flight and cries of birds,—'avis' (contracted into 'au,' as in 'auspex'), and, it is said, 'garrio.' Gradually, however, the functions of both augurs and 'haruspices' were extended to interpretations of the will of heaven as well past and present as future; just as the term προφήτης, i. e. "interpreter," in Scripture, means a moral teacher as well as what we usually call a prophet. As these 'prodigia' were looked upon as an expression of that will, the "soothsayer" was accordingly summoned to explain what they portended, and, where the portent was evil, what were its causes and the rites required to expiate it ('lustratio'). The rules by which these were determined were contained in certain 'libri haruspicipini,' said to have been derived from Etruria. Hence "Tuscis libellis" here, the art itself having been invented by the Etruscan soothsayer Tages.

63. coronata—agna] The sacrifice at a 'lustratio.' See last note, and cf. Sat. ii. 158 and note.

64, 65. bimembri—puero] Liv. xxvii. 11, "cum elephanti capite puerum natum."

66. fetae—mulae] Liv. xxxvii. 3 init., "Reatini (nuntiabant) mulam in agro suo peperisse."

67. lapides—inber] Liv. i. 31, "Devictis Sabinis (in the reign of Tullus), nuntiatum est, in monte Albano lapidibus pluisse."

68, 69. examen—delubri] Liv. xxvii. 23, "Casini examen apium ingens in foro consedisce."

69, 70. in mare—torrens] Liv. xxxiv. 45, "Nare amni lac fluxisse."

71. decem—sestertia] Note on Sat. i. 106.

73. arcana.] "Hoarded," agreeing with "sestertia" sub., see last note.

78. Tarpeia fulmina] See Sat. xii. 6 and note.

79. Cirrhaei—vatis] i. e. Apollo. See Sat. vii. 64 and note.

80. venatricis—Puellae] Diana.

83. Pharin—aceto] The Egyptian vinegar was in request. Cf. Martial, Ep. xiii. 122. "Amphora Niliaci non sit tibi vilis aceti." "Elixii," "boiled."

93.] Isis was supposed to punish with blindness those who invoked her to witness a falsehood. The "sistrum" was a musical instrument used in the worship of Isis, and which she is herself represented as holding in her right hand. The sound was produced by rattling four bars of metal loosely secured in an oval frame with a handle; hence the term "sistrum," from σεισω. For the worship of Isis at Rome, see note on Sat. vi. 528, 529.

95. phthisis, &c.] Bodily infirmities inflicted by the gods on perjurers. "Dimidium crus," i. e. amputated. See note on Sat. v. 84.

96. sunt tanti] This has been read without the interrogation, and rendered "are worth bearing." "Tanti" may be thus construed no doubt; in fact it has been adopted into colloquial English in this sense. But the more obvious construction, with the interrogation, seems in the present case the more forcible also.

96. locupletem] Gout is usually the result of good living.

97. ne dubitet] "Ladas himself would not hesitate." There were two famous Greek runners of this name.

97, 98. si non—Archigene] "Unless he were mad." Cf. Hor. Sat. ii. 3. 83. "Nescio an Anticyram rati illis destinet omnem." And so l. 165, 166, "ambitiosus et auidax Naviget Anticyram." The hellebor grew there, which was supposed to cure madness. For "Archigene," see Sat. vi. 236.

98, 99. velocis—olivae] i. e. the prizes won by Ladas. "Pisaeae," Olympian. "Esuriens," "barren." 100. ut] "even though."

105. crucem] See note on Sat. vi. 219.

110, 111. mimum—Catulli] "play off as amusing a farce as the actor ('scurra') in the runaway slave of Catullus." See Sat. viii. 186 and note. "Facundus" is another reading for "fugitivus." See Faccioli, Lex v. 'scurra.' It is perhaps better, as the construction 'fugitivus scurra' (the actor and the part acted by him in apposition) is harsh and unusual. 'ib. urbani'] "witty."

116. charta] In which they were wrapped. It was one of the modes of disposing of bad poetry. See Hor. Ep. ii. l. 269, 270, "Deferar in vicum vendentem thus et odores, Et piper, et quicquid chartis amicitur ineptis."

118. omenta] "intestines." Lit. the caul which covers them.

ib. ut video] "as far as I can see."

119. Bathylli] Perhaps the dancer mentioned Sat. vi. 63.

121. et qui] "even one who;" i. e. Juvenal himself.

121—123. nec Cynicos—horti]

"belongs to no school of philosophy." So Hor. Ep. i. l. 14, 15, "Nullius addictus jurare in verba magistri, Quo me cunq̄ue rapit tempestas, deferor hospes."

122. tunica distantia] The Stoics wore a tunic under the toga. The Cynics, whose austerities are supposed to have given origin to their name, rejected this, and were hence termed ἀχίτωνες.

123. exigui—horti] The Κῆποι Ἐπικούρου, in which he established his school at Athens.

125.] "If you merely require bleeding (opposed to the critical cases, "dubii aegri," of l. 124), even the surgeon's apprentice will do for you;" i. e. in such a plain case as the present even my advice, tiro in philosophy as I am, may be of use. The Philippus here mentioned is not known otherwise.

plifies the "majore—funera" of the two preceding lines. "Under this calamity a man does not merely counterfeit grief, satisfying himself, as in the conventional mourning of funerals, with a slight disorder of dress (lit. content to throw open the top of his dress), and a strained tear or two. The tears are quite genuine on this occasion."

132. vestem diducere summam] This was an usual expression of grief. See Seneca, Troades, Act. i. 87—89. Its object was to allow of the mourner beating his breast. See Sen. l. c. "veste remissa substringe sinus, utroque tenus Pateant artus." Sol. 103—106, "Cadat ex humeris vestis apertis, inumque tegat Suffulta latus; Jam nuda vocant Pectora dextras."

136—139.] "If, when a bond ('tabellis') has been read before witnesses ten times over in various places, people allege that the signature of the worthless document is forged, when their own handwriting confutes them as well as the first-water stone of sardonyx, which is guarded in their own ivory casket." The "sardonychus" (for the more usual 'sardonyx') is the seal used for the bond. Being in the debtor's own custody, no impression of could have been purloined. The bond referred to here was "obligatio literis," which required the admission of the debtor, either in writing or before witnesses, give it complete validity. In the present case the creditor has the admission in both kinds. That before witnesses is referred to in l. 136, and that under the debtor's hand and seal in l. 137—139.

136, 137. tabellis—ligni] i. e. the wooden tablets, covered with wax on which legal documents as well as others were written. See note on Sat. i. 63.

137. vana] Lit. "false;" a frequent sense of the word. Here means "forged." See translation above. For a construction similar to that of this line, see Sat. xiv. l. 166, and note.

140. delicias] sub. "hominia." See vi. 47 and note.

141. gallinae filius albae] A proverb for "fortune's favourite," colour white being fortunate, cf. Sat. xii. 65. The origin of the proverb is unknown.

148. adorandae ("venerable") robiginis] These genitives are equivalent to an adjective, — "with their . . ."

152. bracteolam] The statues of gods usually consisted of a wooden figure, with plates ('bractea' or 'laminæ') attached to it by rivets.

153.] "Why should he hesitate (i. e. 'bracteolam ducere') when he constantly melts down an entire Jupiter?" For "conflare," cf. Virg. Georg. i. 508, "Et curvae rigidum falces conflantur in ensem."

160. una domus] i. e. that of Gallicus, where the police cases of each day were brought to be disposed of.

ib. consume] "spend there."

162—173.] "We soon cease to wonder at things when we see them every day."

162. tumidum guttur] The well-known "goitre" of the Alps.

163. majorem infante mamillam] Mela is cited as an authority for this; but he seems only to speak of some "hirsute women" in Meroë.

164, 165.] See Tac. Germ. 4 init., "Truces et coerulei oculi, rutilae comae." Cf. cap. 38.

165. torquentem cornua] Agreeing with "caesariem." The ends were curled into a ram's horn at the side of the face. "Madido," "greased."

197. Caedicius] He is said to have been an instrument of Nero's cruelty in mock judicial proceedings; as we might say, "a Jeffreys." But there is no good authority for this.

199—207.] The story is from Herodotus (vi. 86). Leotyichides and Cleomenes, the two kings of Sparta, had left some Aeginetan prisoners in charge at Athens, whom the Athenians, after the death of Cleomenes, refused to deliver up to Leotyichides alone. The latter rebuked their perfidy, and told them what had happened at Sparta in the case of Glaucus. He was sorely tempted to detain some money which had been left with him as a deposit (παρακαταθήκη), and went so far as to consult the Delphic oracle as to the expediency of taking a false oath on the subject. The Pythia recommended the perjury, on the ground that θανάτος γε καὶ εὐνοκον μένει ἄνδρα, but added something about "Ὀρκον παῖς, and the probable consequences to his posterity, which frightened Glaucus. He apologized for his inquiry, but was told that it was a crime equal to the perjury itself. And accordingly (as Leotyichides pointedly observed) Γλαύκου νῦν οὔτε τι ἀπόγονόν ἐστι οὐδὲν οὐτ' ἐστίη οὐδ' αὖ μιν, ἐκτίετρίπται δὲ πρόρρηξος ἐκ Σπάρτης. The anecdote was not so successful as it deserved to be.

245. nigri] “gloomy.”

ib. uncum] Cf. Hor. Od. i. 35. 19, 20, “nec severus Uncus abest liquidumque plumbum.” In both passages it is probably the staple in the wall to which the prisoner's chain was attached. The hook by which prisoners were dragged to execution (see Sat. x. 66) seems inapplicable here.

19. Sirena] i. e. music. "Flagellia," the sound of the lash.

20. Antiphates—Polyphemus] "the man-eater of his household." A forcible term for a brutal master. Antiphates, the king of the Laestrygonians, and the Cyclops Polyphemus, are the two cannibals of the Odyssey. Cf. Sat. xv. 16—23 and note. For the proceedings of Antiphates, see Odyssey, x. 116. Αὐτίχ' ἔνα μάψας ἑτάρων, ὠπλίσσατο δόρπον. Similarly the Cyclops, Od. ix. 289—292, Σὺν δὲ δύω μάψας, ὥστε σκύλακας, ποτὶ γαίρ Κόπτε . . . Τοὺς δὲ διαμειλίσσι ταμῶν ὠπλίσσατο δόρπον "Ἦσθι δ' ὥστε λίων."

22. uritur] One mode of punishing slaves was to burn them with red-hot plates, 'laminæ.' See Plaut. Asin. iii. 2. 4, "Stimulos, laminas, cruces compedesque."

ib. duo—lintea] sub. "amissa." "The merest trifle."

24, 25. ergastula, carcer rusticus] See note on Sat. vi. 151. The terms are here used for the slaves who worked in the "ergastulum." Hence "inscripta" ("branded"), this being a customary punishment.

27. contexere] "rehearse." "Cursu," "pace."

28. respiret] "have to take breath."

28, 29. conscia—fuit] "while still a girl, she was her mother's accomplice." See note on Sat. iii. 49.

58. ventosa cucurbita] a "cuppi glass." Lit. an air-gourd; so called from its resemblance in shape to a vegetable. The 'ventosa' is part the term in Latin medical writ-and not merely an epithet added Juvenal; it means "airy," i. e., ing by the air. The cupping-glass really acts by partially exhausting the air. It is held over a spirit-lan-and a vacuum being thus produced the atmospheric pressure over-part to which the glass is applied reduced below that of the surrouning parts, and the blood rises to surface. The Romans, who were ignorant of the principle of a vacuum, conceived that this was the result some action of the air itself, and called the instrument "ventosa."

67. scobis] This was sprinkled on the floor, like the sand in our country inns.

77. crucibus] Crucifixion, as is well known, was the punishment of slaves and the worst species of malefactors. The ordinary Roman practice was to leave the bodies hanging on the cross, and therefore exposed to the attacks of birds of prey, like the carcasses of other animals. Hence

"crucibus" is here joined to "jumento et canibus" (scil. mortuis). The removal of our Saviour's body from the cross was in compliance with the Jewish law; which would have been violated by its hanging there during the Sabbath.

174. ferro grassatur] "prowls with steel." Cf. Sat. iii. 305.

176. census] See note on Sat. v. 57.

177. fieri] sub. "diver."

184. quercus] i. e. acorns. Cf. Virg. Georg. i. 147—149, "Prima Ceres ferro mortales vertere terram Instituit; quum jam glandes atque arbuta sacrae Deficerent sylvae."

186. submovet] metaphoricæ. See on Sat. i. 37.

190. post finem auctumni] It is said to have been the practice of students to commence their 'antelucana lucubratio' (study before day-break) at this time. But perhaps it only means "just when the nights are getting frosty."

ib. supinum] "sleeping on his back." The posture of the indolent. See Sat. i. 66 and note.

191. ceras] See note on Sat. i. 63.

192, 193. rubras—leges] The headings of laws were written in rubric.

193. vitem posce] "apply for the post of centurion." See Sat. viii.

247, 248, and note.

193. libello] The technical name for a petition to the emperor (lit. "a small writing").

194. buxo] A comb of that material.

195. grandes—alas] "shaggy arm-pits."

ib. Laelius] For any general. "Your commanding officer."

197. aquilam] i. e. the 'primipilatus,' as the 'primipilus' had the charge of the eagle of the legion. For 'primipilus,' see note on Sat. x. 94, 95; and for 'aquila,' see note on Sat. ii. 101. It is called "locupletem aquilam," because the 'primipilatus' was a lucrative appointment. See note on Sat. x. just cited.

199. solvunt] Transl. "disturb."

200, 201. pares—dimidio] i. e. go into trade. "Vendere," "retail."

201. pluris (genit. of the price) dimidio] "at more than fifty per cent. profit." Lit. at more by half; i. e. more than half as much again. So Hor. Sat. ii. 3. 318, "majordimidio," "more than half as large again." And cf. Cic. Att. xiii. 22, "minus dimidio constabit," "will cost less than half what it did elsewhere."

201, 202. mercis—ablegandae Tiberim ultra] Offensive trades, as that of currier, bone-burner, &c. ("Lucri bonus est odor," l. 204), were carried on on the Janiculan side of the river—Transtiberina regio. The latter was then very little built over, although it forms the site of modern Rome.

202. ablegandae] "even though it has to be."

208. poscentibus assem] "begging for a halfpenny."

211—214.] "Why be in such a hurry? I warrant ('praesto') the pupil will excel his teacher in avarice."

215, 216.] The construction is "mala nequitiae nondum implevere medullas naturae;" i. e. the innate qualities (lit. marrow) formed by nature. But 'maturae' and 'nativae' are also read.

217. longi—cultri] the razor.

218. summa] "price."

220. nurum] "his (your son's) wife." "illi" (l. 223) is the son himself.

228. produci] "educates;" as in Sat. vi. 241.

229.] This lines impedes the construction, and is doubtless spurious.

232. relictis] Left far behind. For "metis," see note on Sat. vi. 583.

237. circumscribere] See note on Sat. i. 46, 47. Here the word is perhaps used in the sense of "to cozen," generally.

239. Deciorum] See Sat. viii. 254 and note.

239, 240. quantum — Menoeceus] See Eurip. Phoen. 991—1018. 1090—1092. He was the son of Creon, king of Thebes. In the war of the "Seven against Thebes," Teiresias announced that the Argives would be defeated if Menoeceus sacrificed himself, which he accordingly did.

241—243.] The Thebans claimed descent from five survivors of the armed men who sprang from the dragon's teeth sown by Cadmus. They began fighting as soon as they appeared above ground, "with as much energy (l. 243) as if a trumpet had formed part of the crop."

247. cavea] The den where the wild beasts were kept for the contests in the amphitheatre.

248. mathematicis] Sat. vi. 562 and note.

ib. genesis] Sat. vi. 579 and note; and cf. Sat. vi. 565—567. "Your horoscope is perfectly known to the astrologers; your son has had it cast, to see how long you will live."

251. cervina] Stags were supposed to live above a century. See Plin. Nat. Hist. viii. 32, "Vita cervis in confesso longa, post centum annos aliquibus captis."

252. Archigenen] Sat. vi. 236 and note.

252, 253. eme—composuit] Sat. vi. 661 and note.

253, 254. aliam—rosas] i. e. see another summer.

254, 255. medicamen—rex] "An antidote must be kept, which you must swallow before meals, if either a father or (like Mithridates) a king;" i. e. its use is as necessary now for the former as for the latter. See note on Sat. vi. 661.

256—283.] "If you wish for excitement, don't go to the theatre, but watch the toil and perils undergone in the pursuit of riches."

257. Praetoris pulpita] See notes on Sat. vi. 67; vii. 87. 93.

258. quanto—constant] "what hazard of life they stand the man in."

259. domus] household goods: "gear."

260. fiscus] "a money-bag." The first meaning of the word is "basket." For its technical signification under the empire, see note on Sat. iv. 55.

260—262.] "Wealth which must now be intrusted to the keeping of Castor, since Mars has proved incapable even of protecting his own property." By "Castor" is meant the temple of the Dioscuri in the forum, erected in pursuance of the vow made by the dictator A. Postumius at the battle of Lake Regillus, B.C. 497. The bankers ('argentarii') had their place of business near it, and deposited their cash-boxes in the temple. "Vigilem:" because sentries were placed there. The sacrilege referred to in l. 261, 262, is not mentioned elsewhere, but was probably of recent occurrence: it may have suggested the passage in Sat. xiii. 147—152.

262, 263.] "You may give up going to the plays." See note on Sat. vi. 67. "Aulae:" is used for 'siparium:' see the same note. It means the theatrical performances exhibited at the festivals referred to in these lines. For the festival of Flora, see Sat. vi. 250 and note. That of Ceres was the 'Cerealia.' held on the 7th or 13th of April. The festival of Cybele was the Megalesia. See Sat. xi. 191 and note.

265, 266.] These were other spectacles exhibited at the festivals. The "petaurum" was a see-saw of great length. In its first sense it is a pole on which birds roosted. The "rectum funem" is the tight-rope; the performers on it were called 'funambuli.' The Greek term was σχοινοβάτης; see Sat. iii. 77.

267. Corycia] "Cilician." Corycus was a promontory of that country.

269. sacchi—olentis] The scented bag of saffron. Saffron was imported in large quantities from Sicily and Asia Minor. Horace mentions its use in sauces, "Corycioque croco sparsum stetit." Sat. ii. 4. 68.

271. municipes Jovis] Because he was brought up in Crete by the Curetes. See Virg. Georg. iv. 150—

142, "canoros Curetum sonitus cre-pitantiaque aera secutae (scil. the bees), Dictaeo coeli regem pavere sub antro." Hence too the island is called "Creta Jovis." Aen. iii. 104. ib. municipes] "fellow-burghers;" as in Sat. iv. 33.

272. hic] The "funambulus" of l. 266.

280. Herculeo—gurgite] The Fro-tum Gaditanum (otherwise Herculesum) or Straits of Gibraltar. It was the limit of ancient navigation, as well as of the fabled wanderings of Hercules, who is supposed to have torn asunder the rocks which had divided the Mediterranean from the ocean. Hence the promontories of Calpe and Abyta were called "Herculis columnae."

ib. stridentem] As he sets in the Atlantic outside the straits.

281. grande operae pretium] "well worth while." "Ut—aluta," l. 281, 282, is in a parenthesis; and "viduae" the infin. after "pretium est."

282. aluta] "purse." Lit. dressed leather, from which it has its other meaning of "shoe." Sat. vii. 192.

283. juvenes — marinos] "Tritons." Pliny (Hist. Nat. ix. 4) mentions a "marinus homo" as having been seen in the Oceanus Gaditanus.

284, 285. ille] Orestes. See Eurip. Or. 260—265. He says to Electra, μή τις μὲν οὐρα τῶν ἐμῶν ἔστιν ὄντων. Cf. Hor. Sat. ii. 3. 140, 141, "male dicit . . . vocando Hanc Furiam."

286, 287.] See note on Sat. x. 84. "Hic" is Ajax.

287. parcat — lacernis] "though he may not tear his clothes to pieces."

288. curatoris eget] i. e. is insane. So Hor. Ep. i. 1. 101—103, "Insanire putas sollemnia me, neque rides, Nec medici credis, nec curatoris egere A praetore dati." "Curator" was the technical name for the committee of a person of unsound mind.

He was appointed by the praetor.

289. tabula distinguitur] "is divided only by a plank." The phrase has survived to our time.

291. in — minutas] "into coin." The inscription used for the coin on which it is impressed.

292. solvite funem] sub. "a terra:" "start."

294. fascia] Properly a long strip of cloth; usually the cloth bandage wound round the leg by females as a stocking. Here it means a cloud in that shape.

295. aestivum tonat] "it is mere sheet (summer) lightning." "Ipsa," "this very." Cf. Sat. x. 76.

297. zonam] See note on Sat. viii. 120. "Morsu," i. e. "ore."

298. cujus] The antecedent is 'ei' understood; dat. after "sufficient," l. 300.

ib. modo] "just now."

302. picta—tempestate] See note on Sat. xii. 27. "Tuetur," "keeps from starving."

304. census] See note on Sat. v. 57.

306. Licinus] Sat. i. 109 and note.

307. signis] "statuary."

ib. Phrygia] i. e. of Phrygian marble, from the quarries at Synnada. So Hor. Od. iii. l. 41, "dolentem nec Phrygius lapis . . . Delenit."

308. testudine] See Sat. xi. 94.

308, 309. Dolia—Cynici] i. e. of Diogenes. The story of his living in a tub is well known, although of questionable authority. The tub ("domus," l. 310) was of earthenware. Hence "fregeris," l. 309. For "nudi," see Sat. xiii. 122 and note.

310. commissa] "joined." Lit. put together.

311—314.] Referring to the well-known dialogue between Alexander and Diogenes. The former exclaimed εἰ μὴ Ἀλέξανδρος ἦμιν, Διογὴς δὲ ἡμῖν. See Plut. Vit. Alex. l. 315, 316. nullum—deam] Repeated from Sat. x. 366.

319.] Sat. xiii. 123 and note.

320. Socratici—penates] Socrates was remarkable for his frugality, which in fact was necessary, as he took no fee for teaching like the ordinary Sophists (Plaut. Apol. Sec. cap. 4). Diog. Laertius has a story (lib. ii. cap. 34) of a dinner-party given by Socrates. Xantippe was scandalized at its deficiencies, but was told by her husband τοὺς πρὸς ἁλλοὺς ἀνθρώπους ἦν ἡ ἰσθμία αὐτὸν δὲ ἰσθμία, ἡ αὖτε ἡ ἰσθμία. See too Diog. Laert. ii. 27.

325. rugam—labellum] "makes you frown and pout."

326. tertia quadringenta] See note on Sat. i. 106. "Duos equites," i. e. their census. See above.

327. implevi gremium] "satisfied

329—332.] See note on Sat. x. 331, 332. Narcissus amassed a vast fortune under Claudius. He was put to death shortly after Nero's accession.

Illic caeruleos, hic piscem fluminis, illico Oppida tota canem venerantur, nemo Dianam.

2. portenta] So Virg. Aen. viii. 698, of the Egyptian divinities: "Deum monstra."

3. pars] The crocodile was especially sacred in the Thebaïs. Herod. ii. 69, Τοῖσι μὲν δὴ τῶν Αἰγυπτίων ἱεροὶ εἰσι οἱ κροκόδειλοι, τοῖσι δ' οὐδ', . . . οἱ δὲ περὶ τῆς Θήβας καὶ τὴν Μοῖριος λίμνην οἰκίοντες, καὶ κάρτα ἡγνῆται αὐτοὺς εἶναι ἱεροῦς.

ib. saturam—ibin] The ibis was a kind of stork, which devoured serpents. It was revered as sacred from its utility in this respect.

5. resonant—chordae] Memnon was an Ethiopian prince, the son of Eos (Aurora). He came to the assistance of Priam in the Trojan war, and killed Antilochus; see note on Sat. x. 253. He was himself killed by Achilles. A colossal statue of black stone near Thebes was supposed by the Greeks to represent Memnon, and to emit a sound like the snapping of a harp-string when touched by the rising sun. The statue was really that of Amunoph III. It is one of two colossi which are seated as the advanced guard the propylaea, leading through sphynx avenue 1100 feet in length the palace-temple of Amunoph.

ib. dimidio] See on Sat. v. 84.
6. centum—portis] See Il. i. 383, Αἰὲς ἑκατόμυλοι εἰσι, ἡ πόσις δ' ἄν' ἑκάστην Ἀνέρες ἐοικυῖσι σὺν ἵπποισιν καὶ δρεσφί. It is unfortunate for this poetic conception that Thebes was wall-less and consequently never had gates. The portals of temples may have been meant; and the latter are sufficiently numerous to justify the computation,—in round numbers. See Miss Beaufort's Egyptian Sepulchre Longman, 1861.

7. caeruleos] sub. "piscem;" "blue water fish." 'Aeluros' (cats) is conjectural reading, but some opposition to "piscem fluminis" seems required.

8. canem] Sat. vi. 534, note.

dog's mistress. This, however, is an oversight of the poet. Bubastis (the Egyptian Artemis) had a temple in the city of the same name. See Herod. ii. 137, Βουβάστι πόλις . . . ἐν τῇ καὶ ἰρὸν ἔστι Βούβαστιος ἀξιαπηνηγτότατον.

9. porrum—morsu] This prohibition was confined to Pelusium. See Aul. Gellius, xx. 8, "Eam causam esse dicant sacerdotes Aegyptii, cur Pelusiotae caepe non edunt: quia solum olerum omnium contra lunae aucta atque damna vices minuendi et augendi habeat contrarias."

11. lanatis animalibus] See Herod. ii. 42, "Ὅσοι μὲν δὴ . . . νομοῦ τοῦ Θηβαίου εἰσὶ, οὗτοι μὲν νυν πάντες οἶων ἀπὲχόμενοι, αἴγας θύουσι."

12. fetum—capellae] See Herod. ii. 46, αἰβονται δὲ πάντας τοὺς αἴγας οἱ Μενόησιοι. For "fetum," see on Sat. xiv. 78.

14. tale—facinus] i. e. the cannibalism of Antiphatēs and Polyphemus (l. 18). See note on Sat. xiv. 20. The wanderings of Ulysses were detailed by himself to his entertainer Alcinoūs king of the Phaeacians; they occupy Od. vi.—xiii.

16. aretalogus] "braggart;" from λῆγειν ἀρετὰς, i. e. his own.

17. Charybdi] See it described Od. xii. 235—243, ἐτέρωθι δὲ διὰ Χάρυβδις Δεινὸν ἀνέροιφ' ἔθηκε θάλασσης ἀλμυρὸν ὕδωρ. The mode in which Ulysses escapes is detailed l. 430—444. It suggested (or anticipated) a powerful modern fiction,—the Maelstrom adventure of E. A. Poe.

19. Scyllam] Described Od. xii. 85—100. 245—259. She has six necks: δειραὶ περιμήκεες' ἐν δὲ ἑκάστη Σμερδαλήν κεφαλὴ, ἐν δὲ τρίστοιχοι ὀδόντες. Her abode is a cave immediately opposite to Charybdis. To avoid the whirlpool, the ships are compelled to keep on Scylla's side: as they pass her cavern the necks emerge, and pick off six of the crew.

19, 20. concurrentia saxa, Cyaneas] sub. Συμπληγάδας. These were two rocks at the entrance of the Bosphorus, which closed as ships passed. See their description in Od. xii. 59—62, where they are called Πλαγκταί, from their being possessed of motion. The 'Argo' passed safely through them, after which the rocks became fixed, and therefore ceased to be a source of peril. Cf. Eurip. Med. 2, Εἴθ' ὦφελ' Ἀργοῦς μὴ διαπτάσθαι σκάφος, Κόλχων ἐς αἶαν, κυανέας Συμπληγάδας.

20. plenos—utres] Those given by Aeolus to Ulysses, with the contrary winds tied up in them. The sailors opened them, supposing they contained treasure. See Od. x. 47—24. 46, 47.

21. percussum] sub. "esse."
21, 22. tenui—porcis] This transformation is detailed Od. x. 237—240. Circe gave the sailors some drugged κυκεών, and then struck them with a wand, which turned them into swine. Ulysses partook of the κυκεών, like the party who had preceded him, but escaped by using an antidote; so that the moral reflection in Hor. Ep. i. 2. 24 is not quite accurate. Elpenor was one of the crew; see Od. x. 552—560. When Circe discovered who Ulysses was, she restored the sailors to their natural shape, and entertained them hospitably. Elpenor enjoyed himself so much, that on suddenly waking up next morning he walked out of the doorway of a loft where he had slept, instead of going down the ladder. As might be expected, he broke his neck.

26. solus] With no witnesses. The crew had all perished.

28. super] "near;" as if 'prope.'

ib. volvas (for 'evolvas')] "unrol," i. e. peruse. See note on Sat. i. 5, 6.

35. Coptos] The city was 'Copti, orum,' as well as 'Coptos, i,' the form in l. 28. The old reading was 'Ombos,' but it seems impossible to support it, notwithstanding the "super" in l. 28. 'Ombo' is ninety miles higher up the river than Tentyra, whereas Coptos is nearly opposite to it, so that the 'finitimos' (l. 33) almost disposes of the question in a quarrel so purely local as that which Juvenal describes. The correction 'Coptos' was naturally suggested by the word 'Combos,' which was found in many of the MSS. for Ombos.

90—92. ultimus—gustat] This seems to resume the narrative (of the cannibalism of the Tentyrites) from l. 83, after the digression l. 84—90. The apparent correspondence between "ultimus" and "prima" in l. 90 is accidental only.

93. Vascones] They were a people of Hispania Tarraconensis. In the Sertorian war their chief city, Calagurrus, was besieged by Pompey's legate, Afranius, and defended to the last extremity. The inhabitants not only slaughtered their wives and children for food, but salted what was not consumed.

111.] Sat. i. 44, note.

113. ille—populus] The Vascones.

115.] The reference is to the well-known siege of Saguntum by Hannibal (Liv. xxi. 14, 15). The Saguntines were not driven to feed on human flesh, like the people of Calagurris, but the principal inhabitants voluntarily perished by fire rather than submit. Hence "major clade," l. 114. The "tale quid," l. 118, is therefore "a similar act."

ib.] "Whereas Aegypt is," &c. For "Maeotide ara," see Eurip. Iphig. Taur. 34—41. All Greeks landing on the Tauric Chersonese were sacrificed to Artemis. Iphigenia had been transported there from Aulis; a stag being substituted for her by Artemis. Iphigenia was appointed priestess of the Tauric temple, and in that capacity was called upon to sacrifice Orestes and Pylades, who had landed on the coast. Her recognition of them forms the subject of the tragedy of Euripides.

116—119. quippe—hostia] "Inasmuch as that Tauric inventor ('ara,' sub.) of an inhuman sacrifice only killed men. The victims had not to look forward to being eaten."

120. hos] The Tentyrites.

122, 123. anne—Nilo] "Could they, with the soil of Memphis all parched (the result of the 'nolenti surgere Nilo' in the next line), make any more forcible appeal to the Nile if it refused to rise?" The phrase 'facere invidiam alicui' is frequent in the best Latin for "making a person odious." As applied to matters of religion, it acquired a special meaning,—that of presenting such a forcible remonstrance to the gods, by the exhibition of grief or suffering, as would put them in the wrong if they refused to comply with it. It thus became simply equivalent to "appeal to," which will usually translate it in this use. See Lucan, ii. 35, 36, "Divisere deos: et nullis defuit aris Invidiam factura parens." See also Ovid, Met. iv. 546, 547, "Utque parum justae, nimiumque in pellice saevae, Invidiam fecere deae." The meaning here is therefore obvious: "Could they, if the country were threatened with the worst of evils (a famine from the Nile not rising), appeal to the river with a more terrible sacrifice?"

127, 128. fictilibus; pictae—testae] L. 128 merely amplifies the preceding. These clay-boats are mentioned by Strabo. Probably Juvenal had in mind the description of Egypt given by Virg. Georg. iv. 287—289, "qua Pellaei gens fortunata Canopi Accolit effuso stagnantem flumine Nilum, Et circum pictis vehitur sua rura phaselis."

135. squalorem rei] The Romans put on mourning when themselves or their friends were accused. One form of mourning consisted in wearing the dress and hair disordered. Hence "squalorem" here. Cf. Sat. iii. 212, "horrida mater."

6. Samia—arena] Cf. Virg. Aen. i. 15, 16, "Quam (Carthaginem) Juno fertur terris magis omnibus unam Posthabita coluisse Samo." The latter was her favourite residence.

7. communia] scil. to all soldiers. Opposed to the privilege mentioned in l. 51—61, which affects only those who have a father living.

8. togatus] "a civilian." Cf. Sat. viii. 240; x. 8, and Cicero's well-known "cedant arma togae." See note on Sat. x. 122.

in Illyria. The shoes manufactured there were probably imported for the soldiers' use.

14. subsellia] These were the benches of the 'tribunal' or court of justice. See note on Sat. x. 35.

15. more Camilli] There is no account of such a 'mos' having been established by Camillus. It is probable, however, that he may have introduced it at the siege of Veii, where the soldiers for the first time went into winter-quarters instead of returning to their homes.

17—19. justissima — querelae] "you will say," &c.

18. cognitio] See note on Sat. vii. 228.

20, seqq.] Juvenal's reply.

21, 22. curabilis — injuria] "So that their vengeance is more formidable than the original grievance." "Curabilis" is literally "what causes anxiety," as "securus" is "free from anxiety."

23. Vagellî] A rhetorician of the day, not known otherwise.

24, 25. tot caligas — clavorum] See Sat. iii. 248 and note.

25. tam procul] i. e. so far as the camp, for the purpose of prosecuting his suit. See l. 15, 16.

26, 27. tam Pylades — comici] "so much your friend as to come outside the city wall;" i. e. as your 'advocatus' or witness. For 'molem aggeris,' see note on Sat. x. 95 (head 4). The Praetorian guard (which is here referred to) were quartered just outside the "agger;" so that the term "procul" is ironical.

27, 28. as excusaturos] "who will be certain to . . ."

29. da testem] "even grant you have . . ."

31. barba — capillis] Sat. v. 30 and note.

valent to "togatus," l. 8. The first meaning of 'paganus' is "one who lives in the country." The term was derived from the 'pagi,' or fortified towns, which were distributed over the country districts for the protection of those engaged in agriculture. Gradually, however, it came to be applied to civilians, whether living in the country or not; so that the classification 'milites et pagani' is of frequent occurrence.

34. contra pudorem] "in derogation of a soldier's fortune and honour" (which would suffer by the evidence).

36. sacramentorum] i. e. of soldiers. The 'sacramentum' was the well-known military oath. It was taken on the 'signa,' and considered especially sacred;—a soldier who violated it might be put to death without formal trial. Cf. Hor. Od. ii. 17. 9—12, "Non ego perfidum Dixi sacramentum: ibimus, ibimus, Ut-cunque praecedes."

36, 37. convallem ruris aviti—aut campum] "a slope or level of my patrimonial land."

38, 39. saxum—libo] The Roman fields were unenclosed, and their boundaries marked by a statue of Terminus, which usually consisted of merely an upright stone or post. On the fête of the 'Terminalia' an altar was erected near this, and honeycombs, corn, and wine offered on it, with a lamb or sucking-pig. The 'Terminalia' were celebrated every 23rd of February, at the sixth milestone on the road to Laurentum.

41. vana—ligni] Repeated from Sat. xiii. 137. See note there.

42. expectandus erit] "I, as a civilian, must wait for." Opposed to the soldiers' ("illis—ambit," l. 48) privilege, a speedy hearing.

ib. annus] i. e. a year's cause-list. I must wait its being gone through, for it to reach (lit. begin) my case.

43. tunc] "even at the year's end."

44. subsellia] See on l. 14 above.

45. ponente lacernas] i. e. to assume the judicial robe.

46. Caedicio] Sat. xiii. 197.

ib. Fusco] Probably the 'Fuscus' of Sat. iv. 112; see note there. "Micturiente:" transl. "growing impatient."

48. illis—ambit] i. e. the soldiers.

Solis praeterea testandi militibus jus
Vivo patre datur: nam, quae sunt parta labore Militiae, placuit non esse in corpore census Omne tenet cujus regimen pater. Ergo Coranum, Signorum comitem castrorumque aera merentem, Quamvis jam tremulus, captat pater. Hunc labor aequus

Provelit, et pulcro reddit sua dona labori.
Ipsius certe ducis hoc referre videtur,
Ut, qui fortis erit, sit felicissimus idem,
Ut laeti phaleris omnes, et torquibus omnes.

51—54.] By the strict rule of law a son was incapable, during his father's lifetime, of acquiring property, and consequently of bequeathing it to others. Whatever he did acquire was "in corpore census ('property') cujus tenet regimen pater;"—belonged to the father absolutely. Under Augustus an exception to the rule was made in favour of property acquired by military service, which a son was allowed to treat as his own, and accordingly to bequeath. It was called "castrum peculium."

54. Coranum] The name may have been suggested by Hor. Sat. ii. 5, which is a compendium of the practice of legacy-hunters ('captatores'). See note on Sat. iv. 18—22. 'Coranus,' in the satire of Horace, is a rich man who takes in one of these 'captatores.'

55. aera merentem] i. e. 'stipendia.' It is the technical term for military service.

56. captat] See note on l. 54

ib. hunc] scil. "Coranus."

ib. aequus] i. e. 'non iniquus.' Kindly toil, which brings him some personal advantage.

57. provelit] "leads to promotion." The repetition of the word "labori" in this line is unaccountable; but the satire is feeble throughout, and on this account is often considered spurious. It perhaps more resembles the production of advanced life.

58. hoc] i. e. "ut, qui fortis erit, sit felicissimus," amplifying l. 57.

58—60.] "It is certainly the general's interest that this should be so,—that merit should be rewarded." "Laeti," sub. "sint."

60. phaleris → torquibus] These were frequently given as good service decorations. See Livy xxxix. 31 fin., "Pro concione laudati potero die, donatique a C. Calpurnio equites phaleris."
